

City of Glen Cove Shifts Commuter Ferry Service Timeline

A commuter ferry service between Glen Cove and New York City continues to be a priority for the City, but due to the upcoming sale and future construction of Garvie's Point, the timeline has now been adjusted. With feedback from potential ferry operators and RXR Glen Isle Partners, the redevelopment partner who will provide a subsidy for the project, the City believes it is important to amend the RFP and extend the response by another 12 months to accommodate for the accelerated construction schedule.

Over the past three years there has been a significant increase in the amount of interest by area commuters for a ferry service to be re-established in Glen Cove. The City was pleased to receive an equally enthusiastic turn out when they met with seven ferry operators this past July.

"At that time, ferry operators who were interested in providing the service shared their concern for the compressed timeline outlined by the city in the RFP – a timeline which will now change," said Deputy Mayor Barbara Peebles. "They voiced interest in an extension to ensure a successful launch of a premiere commuter ferry service." Therefore, the City has notified all interested ferry operators that an amendment to the RFP will be issued to extend the time frame when the horizontal construction plan is well underway, road access and parking matters have been resolved, and provide ferry operators more lead time for expansion planning.

"RXR Glen Isle Partners commend the city for the progress at the ferry terminal site over the past few years," said Frank Haftel, Vice President, RXR/Glen Isle Partners. "We join the city in looking forward to the start of ferry service and believe it is in the

Large Haul at Beach Clean Up Day

By Tab Hauser

The Glen Cove Beautification Commission sponsored a beach clean-up day held at Prybil and Crescent Beach. Volunteering for the event were approximately 60 area residents of all ages. The haul out for morning consisted of many large garbage bags. As part of the Ocean Conservancy's efforts the group logged the type of trash they picked up before it was put into the bags as a way to monitor and then education people to what is on shore.

"I thought I was doing a good thing," says acclaimed actor Paul Sorvino in the opening moments of the tense, moody thriller "The Brooklyn Banker", written and produced by Locust Valley resident Michael Ricigliano Jr. But as it turns out, good things are a matter of perspective in the mob-controlled Williamsburg neighborhood where the title character, Santo Bastucci, grew up, and where traditional notions of loyalty and honor are refracted through the twisted prism of power and violence.

Ricigliano himself grew up in Garden City, but his father was raised in Williamsburg, and the stories he told his son of the tight-knit Italian community in the 1970's inspired him to write the screenplay for "The Brooklyn Banker". The plot revolves around an honest family man with a savant's gift for numbers, who gets reluctantly pulled into his father-in-law's business dealings with the local mob boss. His efforts to stay clean (and alive) form the crux of the conflict in this independent film, which opened last month to rave reviews. The movie is directed by Federico Castelluccio, well-remembered as the Italian mobster Furio in the classic HBO show "The Sopranos".

Married with three children, Ricigliano attended Hofstra University and became a successful real estate attorney – so what made him turn to filmmaking? "I had an idea for a film and thought – why not?" So he studied screenwriting books, and then went to his basement and started writing. The screenplay for

"The Brooklyn Banker" evolved out of his short film, "Lily of the Feast", which won the "Best Short Film" award at the 2011 Long Island International Film Expo.

Learning from hard experience that the only way to make the film your way is to control as many aspects of the process as possible, Ricigliano formed his own production company, Jackson Leonard Productions. In addition to "The Brooklyn Banker", he now has several projects in various stages of development, including a television drama and a reality show.

Some would say that moving from law practice to the movie world is something of a gamble, but Ricigliano doesn't see it that way. "You've got to put everything out there," he said. "You've got to go for it and put yourself on the line if you want to succeed." If you want to check out the results of Michael Ricigliano's vision and persistence, "The Brooklyn Banker" is now available on Amazon Video and iTunes.

A Plea From Glen Cove Hospital Auxiliary

Glen Cove Hospital's Auxiliary is urgently seeking new volunteers due to the expansions that have been developing recently. Departments such as Emergency room, Endoscopy, admitting, junior auxiliary, patient library, reception desk, patient transport and surgical lounge have openings. Without new volunteers the current workers are having to take on extra shifts in order that offices can be covered efficiently. The reception desk also needs coverage in the evening from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m., to give visitors needing information and directions during those hours.

In addition to the above services, the hospital is asking for assistance with in-patients, from small services like an extra blanket, a magazine, or perhaps some conversation. Please think it over; if you can spare a few hours a week you can become an Ambassador for your hospital. Imagine how good you'll feel! Glen Cove football commemorates 100 years

Glen Cove wide receiver Steven King carries the ball in the first half

Glen Cove High School's alumni, students, faculty and staff gathered on Maiden Field to celebrate the school's Centennial Football Team season opener on Sept. 9.

Alumni spanning the decades, as far back as the 1940's, lined up at the goal post as the school's centennial team entered the field to take on Division High School. After the national anthem was played to perfection by the school's band, there was a moment of silence in honor of Glen Cove alumni Angelo Fillipone (Class of '98). Honorary captain Bob Kormoski, who led the last undefeated Glen Cove football team in 1960, and City of Glen Cove Mayor Reginald Spinello joined the team's captains for the coin toss to kick off the historic event. New York State Senator Carl Marcellino, NYS Assemblymen Charles Lavine and Glen Cove City Court Judge Richard McCord were also in attendance to cheer the team on.

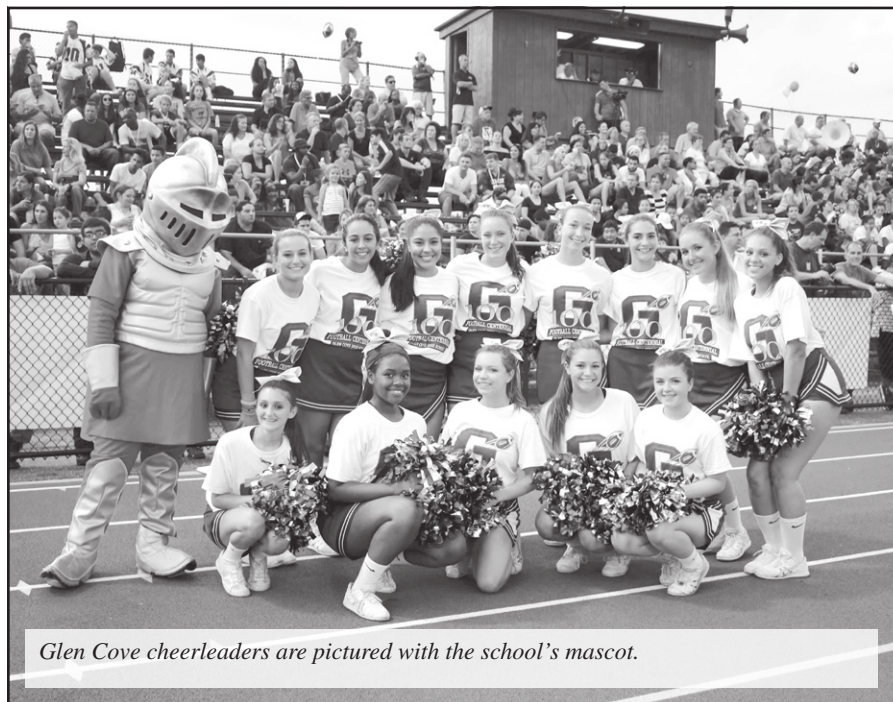

During half time, band members, cheerleaders and members of the kickline performed and all of the alumni present were invited to take a place on the field. Each decade of athletes was announced and applauded by those in attendance.

The game was dedicated in memory of coach James Brennan. Brennan began his career at Glen Cove in 1970 and became head coach of the football team in 1972. During his tenure, coach Brennan won back the Chapman bell, a fixture at Glen Cove High School graduations by defeating Hempstead. Brennan also served as business chairperson and assistant principal during his time in Glen Cove. He retired in 2003. His family attended the game and rang the Chapman bell to initiate the evening's festivities.

Each of the alumni in attendance signed a T-shirt and a football representing the decade in which they played. Those items will be placed in the school's athletic showcase.

A Park with a Purpose

By Elizabeth Winchester

Monarch butterflies leave Canada and the northern United States every fall, migrating thousands of miles to Mexico. On the evening of September 9, Sea Cluffers of all ages made their own migration, but much closer. They flocked to Marden Triangle to celebrate the opening of the new Butterfly Garden there.

"This is a very special place in Sea Cliff," said Susan Giordano, of Susan Giordano Designs, who designed the garden and enlisted the help of landscaper and mason Billy Laderer to build it. "What I am most joyful about this evening is to finally see life in this park."

The celebration included music by cellist Josh Epstein, butterfly wings for the kids to wear as they fluttered about, and delicious refreshments. In addition to Giordano, other leaders instrumental in initiating, planning, planting and sustaining the garden—including Sea Cliff trustees Robin Maynard and Dina Epstein, mayor Bruce Kennedy, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Dan Fagin, and Henriette Rohl—addressed the crowd.

"This is really a great accomplishment," said Kennedy, who explained that most of the money for the park came from private fundraising as opposed to tax dollars, and that the idea for it came from the discovery of milkweed growing at Sea Cliff Beach. Milkweed is the plant on which female monarch butterflies lay their eggs. Caterpillars eat milkweed leaves. A way to help the monarchs, whose numbers are in decline, is to create areas such as the Butterfly Garden, where milkweed and nectar-producing flowers can grow.

Kennedy noted that the passion of the Environmental Conservation Commission, led by Epstein, and other park supporters, helped make the project possible. The committee took up the project as a way "to preserve butterflies and bees...and to beautify our park," Epstein explained, but credited Giordano for helping the park take wing. The Flutterby Foundation, Inc. seeks to continue the garden design by adding a similar one on the opposite end of the park, create other gardens with the same purpose, and to work with schools on teaching kids about the monarch and how to protect it. Efforts to expand the garden or to create additional gardens will rely on private donations.

The monarch makes the longest two-way migration by far of any butterfly, traveling as far as 2,000 miles from southern Canada all the way to a few mountainsides in south-central Mexico, where tens of millions congregate for the winter. Then in the spring the same butterflies move north as far as Texas and Oklahoma, laying their eggs on milkweed along the way. The next generation usually reaches Long Island in June or July. After another two generations, the monarchs are ready to move south again in September.

"It's an amazing natural phenomenon," said Fagin, a science journalism professor at New York University who is currently writing a book about monarchs. "The monarchs are great navigators, and somehow they know how to return to the same Mexican hillsides where their great-great grandparents spent the winter. But this unique migration is very much in danger; the monarch population has fallen by almost two-thirds over the last dozen years, mostly because of the disappearance of milkweeds. We can all do our part to help monarchs—and bees and other butterfly species, too—by planting pollinator gardens," Fagin said. Gardeners who want to try it themselves can visit monarchwatch.org for ideas, or can consult the Flutterby Foundation's Facebook page for a list of local plants butterflies love.

Fagin noted that Sea Cliff's new butterfly garden has been registered with Monarch Watch as an official monarch waystation, which is a place that provides monarchs with what they need to survive and continue their migration. Giordano hopes that many monarchs will visit the park on their journey, as well Sea Cluffers now and for generations to come. With that, Kennedy and Sea Cliff children joyfully released monarchs into the air. Learn more about the foundation at flutterbyseacliff.org, and on Facebook @flutterbyfoundation.

North Shore School Board Appoints Superintendent Search Firm

Two Community Forums Scheduled for Monday, 9/19, & Thursday, 9/29

North Shore Schools, Glen Head, September 2016 – The North Shore Board of Education is pleased to announce the selection of a search firm, Leadership Advantage (LA), that will assist in the recruitment of a new superintendent for the North Shore Central School District. The current superintendent Dr. Edward Melnick will be retiring after the completion of the 2016-17 school year in June 2017. Dr. Melnick has served as superintendent with distinction and passion for 14 years.

Leadership Advantage was chosen from five superintendent search firms that made presentations and were interviewed at public board meetings during the months of February and March 2016. President Antoinette (Toni) Labbate stated, "Leadership Advantage clearly understood the mission of our unique, high performing school district and comprehended the essential specifications that were initially outlined by the board. Additionally, Leadership Advantage pledged to work with all of our constituents and agreed to assist the board throughout the entire search process until an exceptional candidate is chosen."

The North Shore Board of Education will be working closely with the Leadership Advantage team consisting of Dr. Michael Osnato, Dr. Frank Auriemma, and Dr. Michael Kuchar. All three have extensive experience in identifying and training effective school leaders. In addition, they each have had successful careers as superintendents and also teach at universities. BOE Vice President Sara Jones said, "Each brings extensive experience to the search for a high quality, motivated individual to take over the direction of our very special school district."

President Labbate stated, "Our top priority this year will be finding an exceptional school superintendent who will join our team of outstanding employees as we work together to continue providing a world-class education for every student in all five of our schools." Trustee and former board president, Dr. Herman Berliner reiterated, "Finding a new superintendent is one of the most important responsibilities of the Board of Education and we take this search very seriously."

On August 1st, trustees met with Leadership Advantage to develop timelines and processes to ensure the goal of having a successful candidate in place by Spring 2017. Two days of meetings for the community and Leadership Advantage have been scheduled to create the profile of the new superintendent. The evenings of Monday, September 19th, and Thursday, September 29th, have been planned for general public meetings with Leadership Advantage and are open to all parents and residents. Both meetings will be held in the North Shore High School Theatre from 7:30 - 9:30 PM. Additionally, a survey will also be available on the district website at www.northshoreschools.org to provide another opportunity for community input.

The Board of Education values the community's input in defining what we need in the district's next educational leader. Throughout this comprehensive process, the Board of Education will continue to keep the community updated as they move forward with this important endeavor. Great Book Guru

- Ann DiPietro

Dear Great Book Guru,
I am going to the Sea Cliff Civic Association's Newcomers Party next Sunday and I am very excited, but concerned that I might not have much to say to my fellow newcomers. If you could recommend a controversial book that might stimulate conversation, I would be eternally grateful
A Somewhat Nervous Newcomer

Dear Somewhat Nervous Newcomer,
I think I have a good book for you, but first I must assure you that the Newcomers Party is great fun and nothing to be nervous about. The book I am suggesting is THE GIRLS by Emma Cline. The narrator is Evie Lloyd, a fourteen year old living in California in the 1960's. Her grandmother (think possibly Lucille Ball) was a famous actress who has left an estate that afforded Evie and her mother with an affluent life style. Despite this, Evie is very unhappy and finds herself attracted to a strange, charismatic teenage girl (think Squeaky Fromme) who is part of a group of young girls who follow Russell (think Charles Manson), an elusive, disheveled, abusive forty year old. When Russell forces the girls to violently attack various Hollywood luminaries (think Roman Polanski's wife Sharon Tate), the story takes a truly dark turn. Their lives are forever changed and Evie, forty-five years later, wonders what it was that drew them all into this horrendous vortex. Recommended!

Name the Celebrity

This week's celebrity was born in Boston on Feb. 8, 1916. Ancestors on her father's side were Mayflower colonists Priscilla and John Alden. Our celebrity's passion for the theatre was sparked during her early teens and by 1932, she enrolled at the American Academy of Dramatic Art. She made her professional debut in a 1933 summer stock production of "The First Mrs. Fraser" and soon was cast in stage roles elsewhere. She even found work in the London theatre production "She Loves Me" in early 1934. Rather plaintive in appearance with flat, but highly distinctive tones, her Broadway debut came about as an understudy in the comedy "Page Miss Glory" in November of 1934, courtesy of George Abbott, in which she also had a minor role. Thereafter, she performed frequently in the comedy mold, and in the service of Abbott, with such delightful plays as "Three Men on a Horse" (1935), "Boy Meets Girl" (1936), "Room service" (1937) and "The Primerose Path" (1939), and earning fine reviews for the last two.

After seeing her performance on stage as "Henry Aldrich's" girlfriend "Barbara", in "What a Life" (1939) come to film, the studio not only liked what they saw but signed her to a seven year contract. Throughout the 1940s, she appeared in a variety of leading ingenue and co-star roles. The important part of "Mae", the farm girl, in John Steinbeck's classic "Of Mice and Men" (1939) starring Burgess Meredith and Lon Chaney, was an early highlight, although it didn't provide her the necessary springboard for stardom. Part of the problem was that the rather reserved actress tended to shun the Hollywood scene. She still lived quietly with her mother. Our celebrity offered consistent, quality work even when the movies she appeared in met with less than stellar reviews. She was afforded the opportunity to work with some of Hollywood's finest leading men, including Fredric March in "Victory" (1940) and "Tomorrow, the World!" (1944), John Wayne in "The Shepherd of the Hills" (1941) and Joel McCrea in "The Great Moment" (1944). Tops on the list was her heart-tugging performance as the anguished daughter victimized by father, Claude Rains, in the classic soap opera "Kings Row" (1942).

Last Week's Celebrity

Last week's celebrity was Paul Williams. Aside, from all the songs he has written with co-writers for musical groups, he has worked on the music of a number of films. These included writing and singing on "Phantom of the Paradise" (1974), in which he also starred and earned an Oscar nomination for the music, and "Bugsy Malone" (1976), introducing actor Scott Baio and featured a 13 year old Jodi Foster. He also wrote and sang the song "Where Do I Go From Here?", which was used in the end credits of the Michael Cimino directed film "Thunderbolt and Lightfoot" (1974), which starred Clint Eastwood, Jeff Bridges and George Kennedy. He contributed lyrics with music by John Williams to "Cinderella Liberty" (1973) starring James Caan, Marsha Mason and Eli Wallach. That song earned them an Oscar nomination.

Along with musician Kenneth Ascher and Rupert Holmes, he wrote the music and lyrics to "A Star is Born" (1976) with Barbra Streisand and Kris Kristofferson. The love ballad, "Evergreen", lyrics by Paul Williams and melody by Barbra Streisand from the movie won the Academy Award for Best Original Song and a Grammy for Son of the Year. He wrote the music for a musical production of "Happy Days" that debuted in 2007 and also made a cameo appearance as an animated version of himself singing "Breathe in the Sunshine" in the hit animated TV series "Dexter's Laboratory". He wrote and sang "What Would They Say", the theme song from the made-for-TV film "The Boy in the Plastic Bubble" (1976) starring John Travolta and Diana Hyland. He has appeared on numerous TV shows including the original "Hawaii Five-O", "The Love Boat", "The Hardy Boys", "The Fall Guy", "Match Game '79", "Babylon 5", and "The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson". He appeared on an episode of "Picket Fences" as the brother of the just deceased "Ginny Weedon" played by Zelda Rubenstein. He provided the voice of the "Penguin" in "Batman: The Animated Series".

Williams struggled with alcohol and substance abuse during the 1970s-'80s. Sober since 1990, Williams, who turned 76 on Sept. 19th, has been active in the field of recovery from addictions and became a Certified Drug Rehabilitation Counselor through UCLA. In 2014, he co-authored "Gratitude and Trust: Recovery is Not Just for Addicts" with Trace Jackson.
