Renowned musician moves seniors

By MIKE CONN

If you'd walked into the Glen Cove Senior Center early in the afternoon last Friday, you would've had to listen hard to hear the notes emanating from David Holzman's piano dancing in the air. But before long, you would've begun to hear the power behind his music as his fingers flew across the keys. And if you'd sat down with the audience of just a couple of dozen lucky people, you more than likely would have become enraptured by his dazzling technique and his ability to stir his listeners' emotions.

out his life, complicating his pursuit of a career in music. He also has severe epilepsy, and lives with the ever-present possibility of a seizure, even during his performances.

Holzman, 69, was diagnosed with epilepsy when he was 18. Since his teenage years he has been prone to seizures, which he describes as explosions of the brain, although at first they weren't too troubling. When he suffered a seizure during a concert as an adult, however, his condition began to affect his career. Most of the negative effects, he said, were the result of the medications he needed.

Music is a universal language that can be adapted for any community. It's a sensory experience that people can enjoy.

Holzman, 69, is a full-time musician who earned a Grammy nomination in 2003 for Best Classical Music Soloist. But it was the story he told the seniors in between songs that makes his talent all the more singular. He has had limited hearing through-

"The medicines that I took meant that I could not think quickly enough," Holzman explained. "I lost the ability to be at full speed, and also, simply, I lost the ability to focus." After mixing and matching medications over the years, he has final-

State to consider changing penalty for fleeing accidents

By MIKE CONN
mconn@iherald.com

State Assemblyman Michael Montesano, a Republican from Glen Head, announced on March 26 that he would co-sponsor a bill that would stiffen the penalties for fleeing the scene of an accident without reporting it to the police. Currently a Class A misdemeanor, the violation would become a Class E felony for a first offense and a Class D felony for a second offense.

In New York state, a Class A misdemeanor can result in one year in jail or up to $1,000 in fines. Those who commit a class E felony, however, can face between one and four years in jail.

"In the last year or so, we've been seeing reports of a lot of leaving the scene of accidents," Montesano said. "In many cases, we have seen people left on the roadside, essentially to die."

The assemblyman explained that one of the primary reasons people flee the scenes of accidents is because they are driving drunk or under the influence of drugs. Many drivers, he ly settled on one that helps keep the seizures in check while allowing him to perform at his best.

He began to lose his hearing, he recalled, at about age 8, as a result of an undiagnosed virus in his left ear. The nerves in that ear were damaged, and for the next 30 years he essentially lived with one ear before he began wearing a hearing aid. “It damaged my life much more than I ever let myself know,” he said, explaining that social interactions in which he had to pretend to hear people were the most difficult part of his hearing loss.

But he never let his hearing loss deter him from pursuing his love of music, he said. With the hearing aid, he was able to pick up on mistakes he made earlier in his career, and that has helped him perfect his craft.

Loretta Murray, the executive director of Mill Neck services for the deaf and hard-of-hearing, in Bohemia, explained that you don’t necessarily need to hear to enjoy music. A late-deafened adult herself, Murray said, “Music is a universal language that can be adapted for any community. It is a sensory experience that people can enjoy.”

As Holzman played at the senior center last week, several audience members began to cry, and told him that his music elicited unexpected feelings. He replied that their tears shouldn’t be a source of shame. Rather, he said, “Tears don’t mean you’re sad, [they mean] your emotions are overflowing.”

He also told them about the importance of his body while he plays. “It’s like I’m using a different part of my body for each emotion,” he said, later adding, “I don’t hear, so I need to be conscious of my body” — which is why he usually plays with his eyes closed.

Several seniors said afterward that Holzman’s performance was an inspiration. Leatrice Lees, 93, whose late husband, Benjamin, was a composer, said that Holzman’s mastery was indicative of the perseverance a musical career requires. “It’s his life,” she said, “and when you’re a musician, that’s it.”

ALTHOUGH THE AUDIENCE for Holzman’s performance at the senior center wasn’t large, several people had strong emotional responses to the music.

Janina Jania, 84, who was moved to tears as Holzman played, said that his music took her back to her childhood in Eastern Europe. “This was one of the best things I’ve heard in my life,” she said. “I have no words for it.”

Carol Waldman, the center’s executive director, said that Holzman’s performance was a pleasure — not only his music, but also the message he shared with his listeners. “It doesn’t matter if you’re struggling with a disability,” said Waldman. “If you have the right attitude and the right opportunities for yourself, you can make

Holzman said that playing at the center was a joy. “Nothing gives me greater pleasure than being able to give life to others,” he said, adding that he loves eliciting such strong emotional responses, and that that has helped fuel his own passion for music for so long.

He concluded that one of the keys to life — one with or without a disabilities — is to maintain confidence in yourself despite adversity. “You can’t let the world around you . . . damage your sense of self-worth,” he said.

Thanking the many heroes at Glen Cove Hospital

Glen Cove Hospital held its annual Heroes Night on March 14 at the Metropolitan, affording two rehabilitation patients, Jessica Bohorquez, of Bethpage, and Jay Israel, of Plainview, with the opportunity to honor and thank their heroes, the caregivers who helped them to get back to their everyday lives.

After celebrating his 21st anniversary with his wife over dinner in August, Israel decided to exercise on a stationary bike.

Later, his son found him balled up on the floor. Israel who had suffered a stroke, was taken to Plainview Hospital. He was transferred to North Shore University Hospital and then Glen Cove Hospital’s brain injury unit. Israel is now back to walking his dog at home.

Bohorquez had recently graduated from college when she was diagnosed with Guillain-Barre Syndrome in September. Thanks in part to the staff at Glen Cove Hospital, Bohorquez has gone from being unable to walk by herself unassisted to working toward participating in a 5K.

“It brought tears to my eyes watching the videos of these two patients’ journeys and seeing how far they have come,” said Carey Otterstedt, director of rehabilitation services at Glen Cove Hospital and the master of ceremonies for Heroes Night. “It meant so much to each of the patients’ caregivers to see these patients thriving now and to be thanked for their efforts in getting Jay and Jessica to this place in their lives.”

Bohorquez and Israel, clearly moved, thanked the more than 30 people who cared for them throughout their journeys to recovery that night, giving each a medal and T-shirt.

STATE ASSEMBLYMAN MICHAEL Montesano aims to prevent drivers from fleeing the scene of accidents with a new bill.

said, will turn themselves in to the police within the next few days, after they are no longer intoxicated, thus avoiding felony DWI or DUI charges. If this new bill were to pass, Montesano said, "It's not in their benefit to run anymore."

Lt. Detective John Nagle, of the Glen Cove Police Department, said that this assumed "benefit" has made the violation more common. He also said that he would strongly support the changes that the bill would bring about. "The problem is, people are weighing the benefits," he explained. "By changing our law, people might think twice about running away from an accident."

According to Nagle, drivers fleeing the scenes of accidents has been a pervasive issue in Glen Cove over the past 15 months. In 2018, there were 90 such violations. As of April 1, there had been 20 this year. He said he believed the bill could go a long way toward solving this problem.

"This kind of closes the loophole where people leaving the scene think they won't get charged as strongly," Nagle said.

According to Montesano, the bill is currently working its way through the Assembly, and he hopes a resolution will come by May or June. If the bill were to be passed by the Assembly, it would move on to the State Senate. Sen. Jim Gaughran, a Democrat from Northport, said he planned to support the bill if it made it to that point.

"I think if somebody is in a serious accident, and they just leave the scene without offering to help somebody who might be hurt," Gaughran said, "that's just wrong."

His only real concern with the bill, he added, is what it might define as a serious accident. He explained that he does not believe that calling the police should be a legal requirement in the case of something minor, like a fender-bender. Rather, the law should take effect if someone is hurt or if there is serious damage to at least one of the vehicles.

Montesano said that if the bill passes, he would want drivers to realize that the stakes are higher if they flee the scene of an accident. The welfare of drivers and passengers is his chief concern, he said, and the bill could help to save lives.

"We're just trying to hold people more accountable and more responsible," he said, "so, hopefully, more people will use better judgment."

In many cases, we have seen people left on the roadside, essentially to die.

THE WELL-APPOINTED HOME

Top Design Trends for 2019

Just like fashion, interior design is always changing. This doesn't mean you have to be constantly changing your wardrobe or your home. However, by following some simple design trends you can refresh your home and make it feel more current. Below are some of the top interior design trends for 2019.

■ Artisan crafted products made from organic materials. We will continue to see live edge wood products, hand-crafted accessories and natural elements used throughout the home. Think driftwood, chunky wool and beautiful handmade items.

■ Mixed metals. Yes, you absolutely can have a polished nickel faucet and a brass light fixture. The blending and mixing of metals and finishes help to create a space that is layered and intentional. Don't be afraid to mix things up a bit. Switching out your old cabinet hardware with a funky brass knob or pull can be an inexpensive way to breathe new life into your tired cabinets.

■ While white subway tiles are timeless, the trend in 2019 is moving towards a more boldly patterned backsplash. Tiles with a geometric pattern and brighter colors are very popular right now.

■ Lighter wood floors. As you may have already learned, the rich, dark floors that have been so popular also show every speck of dust and dirt. We are moving towards lighter wood floors that help to create an open and airy space while still looking chic. The light-colored wood floors also wear better and hide more.

■ The color black. Believe it or not, black kitchen cabinets are very popular right now. Black cabinets are not gloomy, rather they are super chic and make a great statement. Matte black accessories are timeless, go with everything and add a bit of drama to your space. Be bold!

■ These are just some of the interior design trends that are popular in 2019. Don't be afraid to try some new things in your home. Design rules are made to be broken. Have some fun and be creative. After all, your home is a reflection of you. Let your home speak for you, and let it say wonderful things.

Landing celebrates Jr. NBA winners

Landing School students participated in the Jr. NBA Skills Challenge in February. As part of the contest, students had one minute to dribble through cones and score points from designated spots on the basketball court. Students practiced throughout the week to prepare for the regional competition, which was held on March 16 at Basketball City on Pier 36 in Manhattan.

The students capped off this great achievement with a culminating basketball showcase for the Landing fifth grade. Karen Serani, Landing’s physical education teacher, expressed her pride to all students who entered the contest.

What to know about scams:

- Police and lawyers do not demand payment for legal fees or bail over the phone.
- If someone calls about a loved one who is in prison or kidnapped, phone the person first and then the police before reacting.
- IRS officials do not send out calls or emails to demand payment with the threat of calling law enforcement should they not receive money.
- Utility companies, such as National Grid and PSEG Long Island, do not pick up payments at your home.

- If you get a call from a utility company that you are unsure about, tell them you'll call them back through the company's main number.
- Avoid calls about prizes or ones asking for personal information.
- Avoid online polls asking about where you grew up or your pet's name, as these answers are typically used for password retrieving services.

Fighting against scams

By RONNY REYES and MIKE CONN

rreyes@liherald.com, mconn@liherald.com

Nearly 100 seniors from all over Nassau County gathered at the Franklin Square Senior Center on March 19 for the first in a series of public forums seeking to educate senior citizens about the rising wave of scams targeting them. County Executive Laura Curran, who kicked off the new initiative with Police Commissioner Patrick Ryder, warned seniors that they were the primary targets of phone scams and fake emails.

"You can get anxious from all these calls, and they prey on these anxieties," Curran said. "But don't be afraid. Call the police."

The Nassau County Police Department reported 262 cases of phone scams last year, with nearly half of those targeting senior citizens. Officer Dan Johannessen, who led a presentation on how to spot scams, said that there has been a 19 percent increase in these scams since 2015. Johannessen explained that there were typically four types of phone scams, including calls about a family member being kidnapped or arrested, calls from fake government agencies and utility companies, and calls about fake prizes being won.

The NCPD recently reported a case about a 79-year-old man in Plainview who had been scammed out of more than $147,000 through a fake Publishing Clearing House Sweepstakes call. It had been explained to the victim that he needed to make multiple deposits to pay for fees and taxes related to the sweepstakes. Johannessen added that while stories such as these might seem rare, they can happen to anyone.

"There's been victims that give thousands to these guys," Johannessen said. "You may think it's impossible to fall for this, but these [scammers] are professionals at what they do. And there are some people who lose money and are embarrassed and never report it."

Carol Waldman, executive director of the Glen Cove Senior Center, said that the issue of seniors falling victim to phone scammers is a "huge" problem that is only growing. She said that scammers are becoming more and more capable of exploiting technology and emotions in order to rob their victims of their money. One of the key factors as to why seniors can

Ronny Reyes/Herald

NASSAU COUNTY POLICE Commissioner Patrick Ryder urged senior citizens to contact the police to protect against scams.

so often be victimized by scammers is loneliness, she said.

"They are getting targeted," Waldman said, "because in many cases they [deal with] loneliness and just the idea that someone is calling them up and needing something from them gives them value again."

Although caller ID is a useful tool to spot scammers, Johannessen warned that new technology has allowed these fraudsters to mask their caller ID and appear as though the calls are coming from legitimate organizations. Reports have come in about scam calls with the ID's of the IRS, PSEG Long Island and even local police departments. Ryder said that legitimate organizations would never ask residents for money over the phone and warned seniors to not only hang up their phones, but to jot down the numbers of the callers and report them to the police.

"There's been too many victims so far," Ryder told the seniors at the forum. "After today, you'll be a victim no more."

County officials said that they would be holding additional forums throughout Nassau soon. NCPD officers added that a new type of scam was going around asking seniors to purchase gift cards as a form of money. They urged seniors, family members and retail employees to be on the lookout for those purchasing multiple gift cards.

The Big Red lacrosse team finished 2018 with a 4-4 league record and looks to improve on some bright spots in the coming season.

"You always want to step up from where you left off," said longtime Glen Cove coach Steve Tripp. "That's been our motto for prepping for this season: Step up."

One such player who will need to make those words a reality is senior defenseman Jack Coyle. He'll now look to not only slide in as the leader of the defensive unit, but will look to fill the role that current Siena College defender Jack Kaffl left after graduating last June.

"Coyle is going to try to fulfill that 'cover guy' role for us on defense," Tripp said. Joining Coyle on the defensive end are Octavio Echegaray and Fernando Portillo. "We are going to be working from our defense forward this season," Tripp said. "And, really, it all starts with Jesse Mayreis."

Mayreis is a senior goalie that has been the team's primary starting keeper since his sophomore season. "He has played significant time in the role and protects the crease well," Tripp said. "He is the backbone of our defense and makes big plays when we need him to."

Despite the focus on the defensive half, Glen Cove also rosters some talented offensive weapons, including seniors Mayan Letellier and Felipe De La Fuente. Letellier successfully nabbed multiple multi-goal games in 2018, including a game in which he scored a hat trick. "Mayan can control a game for us offensively," Tripp said. "He likes to have the ball, he likes to create his own shot, and other guys are going to be looking to find opportunities to get their shots off as well."

De La Fuente, as well as junior Peter Rodriguez and senior Thomas Klimaszewski will look to diversify the scoring output for the Big Red in 2019. "Klimaszewski was our finisher last year and has to carry, distribute and create offense for us," Tripp said. "Rodriguez, who is a natural lefty scorer, was up and down from varsity and JV last year."

The challenge for Glen Cove throughout their non-league games has been to find its tempo and creating opportunities in situations that feel comfortable for the squad. "Each team changes year to year," Tripp said. "We have to figure out if we are better at creating havoc defensively or containing the game. We've seen us go up and down throughout our nonleague games thus far."

Glen Cove opened up league play earlier this week at Sewanhaka. "They are a young team and have a lot of experience,"

Tripp said. "They had a lot of sophomores starting for them last year, so their juniors last year have a lot more game experience than juniors usually do."

Tripp is looking for his group to improve on its overall clearing game, playing a full game defensively on a consistent basis, and increasing its faceoff win percentage. "Our guys are looking to fulfill roles, and now they get the chance," he said.

HUNDREDS OF FAMILY members lined the Glen Cove High School gymnasium bleachers to cheer on the students during the competitive events.

School spirit soars during Red & Green games

Glen Cove students took part in the annual Red and Green district games, hosted by the PTSA and the Glen Cove High School Student Senate, on March 29. This event is a friendly competition between all district students, as Gribbin and Connolly Schools are known as the Green Team, while Deasy and Landing Schools are the Red Team.

Doors opened at 6 p.m., and by 6:30 p.m. the two teams were storming into the gymnasium to begin the games with a fun and friendly rendition of the "Cha-Cha Slide" dance. The two teams then separated and competed in various events, such as clean the house for the elementary schools, tug-of-war for Finley Middle School and team handball for Glen Cove High School.

Due to unforeseen circumstances, this year's games were cut short. Therefore, the high school games will be completed at a later date. And the winners will be announced once all of the competitions are concluded.

Herald hosts Business Women

Hundreds gathered for the Premier Business Women of Long Island Awards Gala at the Heritage Club at Bethpage on March 28.

RichnerLive, a division of Richner Communications, publisher of Herald Community Newspapers, hosted the event to honor 48 esteemed Long Island businesswomen for excellence in their fields and contributions to their local communities.

The honorees came from 17 different career fields, including banking, engineering, health, education, law, entrepreneurship and non-profit. Before the dinner and awards ceremony, which drew more than 500 guests, the honorees celebrated with a VIP cocktail and networking hour, at which County Executive Laura Curran congratulated the women.

"I was really excited to help honor these wonderful women tonight and to see so many strong women in lead positions getting the recognition they deserve," she said. "I'd also like to congratulate Stuart Richner, whose RichnerLive events are off to an auspicious start. I'm sure this will be the first of many."

A performer wearing a shiny black "champagne dress," which held 102 glasses of champagne, floated around the room delivering bubbly to the honorees and special guests during the VIP hour.

Amanda Talty, president and CEO of the Tourette Association of America, was among the youngest women being honored. When asked her biggest career accomplishment, she said, "I was appointed CEO and president of a national organization before I turned 40."

Talty had 15 years of non-profit experience before she joined the Tourette Association of America as vice president of development in 2016. She became president and CEO on June 1, 2018.

The mother of two spends much of her time traveling the country to the non-profit's 32 chapters and over 80 support groups to connect with people with Tourette syndrome and learn about the challenges they face. While this means spending time away from her family, she expressed a passion for helping children and families, as well as bolstering awareness for Tourette syndrome, which she said is highly stigmatized.

"My biggest challenge is managing expectations and balancing the needs, wants and desires of my staff, of the people I serve and my family," she said. "The balancing act can be hard."

Antoinette Gordon-Hessing, customer care manager of Mercedes-Benz of Rockville Centre, agreed. She has been married for 22 years and has three children, all the while rising up the ranks of the male-dominated automotive industry.

"We, as women, go about our everyday lives doing what's expected of us as wives, mothers and employees ... I'm sure if you ask any woman in this room tonight what their initial thought was about coming here to be honored, they're going to tell you it is an inconvenience," she joked. "But we said, 'I'm going to walk in here and be honored.' It's a beautiful thing."

Gordon-Hessing is a first-generation immigrant from Jamaica, which made climbing up the ladder difficult, she said. "I got here with hard work and tenacity," she said. "And I still face challenges today."

Honorees also spoke of the impactful role women play in business and how it felt to be recognized for their work.

"It's a big privilege," said honoree Teresa Laspina-McCarthy, director of community outreach at Maple Family Centers. "It's nice to be recognized for something you love." McCarthy holds fundraisers for organizations large and small at Maple Family Centers' four Long Island locations.

"This is a great night to be with women who are at the top of their fields," said honoree Kathleen Deegan, a partner at Forchelli Deegan Terrana Law. "The slate of honorees is really impressive."

Andrea Elder-Howell, vice president of legal at PSEG Long Island, another honoree, said it felt amazing to be recognized. "It shows people that women play a critical role in business," she said. "We bring a whole different perspective."

Dan Eichhorn, president and chief operating officer of PSEG Long Island, attended the awards dinner to support Howell. "We're just so proud of Andrea. It's so well deserved," he said. "She is a great asset to our company and the community. It's fabulous that she's being honored."

Stuart Richner, CEO and publisher of Richner Communications, welcomed guests to the event. "It is my deep belief that women must be represented equally in every profession, that they should have access to every rung on the career ladder," he said. He announced the inauguration of the Richner Business Network and inducted the women honorees as the first official members of it.

Richner then presented honorees with elegant, jade crystal awards commemorating the event. Masters of Ceremonies Antoinette Biordi, of News 12 Long Island, Kara Reifert, of K-98.3 and Alyssa Seidman, of the Sea Cliff/Glen Head Herald, announced each woman as they walked the stage to cheers of support and appreciation.

Last, the event honored "Wonder Girl" Casey Roszko, a senior at Manhasset High School, for her dedicated service to the Leukemia & Lymphoma Society, raising over $118,000 in 2018. A portion of the evening's proceeds will be donated to the charitable organization.

STEPPING OUT

Where to go, what to do, who to see

As new lamb comes into season, it's an ideal centerpiece for a special meal.

Comforting, flavorful chicken soup is always good for the soul. Dress it up anyway your family likes – the addition of different veggies will vary the flavor profile.

Decorated cupcakes are a colorful and tasty Easter dessert.

Spring's holiday table

Savor festive traditions with family and friends

Families throughout the area are preparing to welcome spring in the holiday spirit, celebrating Passover and Easter shortly. It's the time to cherish age-old traditions and create new ones with families and friends.

Festive meals are an opportunity to explore the boundaries of your family heritage. Try supplementing your favorite recipes passed down through the generations with recipes that give a contemporary twist to the holiday meal.

Spring celebrations wouldn't be the same without a classic centerpiece: leg of lamb. Whether roasted or grilled, a leg of lamb is a tried and true addition to the Passover or Easter table. As elegant as it is, it's also quite simple to prepare.

Follow these easy guidelines for preparing the perfect roast:

For generous portions, figure on one half pound of lamb per serving.

Use a good meat thermometer to determine doneness. Medium rare: 145° F; Medium: 160° F.

Carve the roast across the grain so the meat will be tender.

Roast Leg of Lamb

- 18 garlic cloves
- 1 bottle dry red wine
- 2 cups freshly squeezed lemon juice
- 3 tablespoons dried Greek oregano
- 3 tablespoons dried rosemary
- Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
- 1 8 pound leg of lamb, bone in and trimmed of fat
- 1/4 cup plus 3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 6 pounds Idaho potatoes, peeled and cut into sixths lengthwise

8 large globe artichokes, stems, leaves, and chokes removed

Finely chop 8 garlic cloves. In a large shallow pan, combine wine, 1 cup lemon juice, chopped garlic, 2 tablespoons oregano, and 2 tablespoons rosemary; season with salt and pepper. Add lamb, turning to coat. Cover; and marinate in refrigerator overnight.

Preheat oven to 350° F. In a mortar and pestle, crush 6 garlic cloves and remaining oregano and rosemary. Remove lamb from marinade, and pierce it with a paring knife in 10 to 12 places. Rub garlic mixture over lamb, pushing the mixture into the incisions. Transfer to a large roasting pan, and pour 3 tablespoons olive oil over lamb, rubbing to coat.

Place potatoes around lamb in roasting pan. Crush remaining 4 garlic cloves, and toss with potatoes. Drizzle remaining 1/4 cup olive oil and remaining cup lemon juice over potatoes. Season with salt and pepper. Transfer to oven, and roast for 1 hour. Add artichokes to roasting pan, and roast 45 minutes more, basting occasionally with lemon juice. Remove from oven, and let rest for 10 minutes before carving

Classic Chicken Soup

- 6 quarts of water
- 1 whole chicken + extra package of wings (optional)
- 2-3 large carrots, chopped
- 3 ribs of celery, chopped
- 1 onion, cut in half
- 1 medium turnip or 2 small turnips, chopped
- 2 parsnips, chopped
- 1 bunch of dill

1 bunch of flat leaf parsley
1/2 tablespoon whole peppercorns
Few sprigs of thyme
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon turmeric for color (optional)

Place chicken and vegetables in a 16 or 20 quart pot and cover with 6 quarts of water.

Make a bouquet garni with the fresh dill, parsley, peppercorns and thyme. Add bouquet garni to pot.

Bring pot to boil and let simmer for 1 hour. Skim the foamy stuff off the top several times while soup is cooking.

Remove chicken and veggies from pot. Allow soup to simmer additional hour with the cover on.

Shred chicken while still warm. Save about half to put into the soup, use the rest for chicken salad or sandwiches.

Allow soup to cool, and place in fridge. Skim any remaining fat off the top.

Reheat to serve. Add chicken, matzah balls and desired vegetables.

Fluffy Matzah Balls

- 2 tablespoons chicken fat or vegetable oil
- 1/2 cup seltzer
- 2 teaspoons grated onion
- 2 teaspoons parsley (optional)
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Pinch white pepper
- 1 cup matzah meal
- 4 jumbo eggs

Mix the eggs well. Add the fat or oil, seltzer, herbs, spices, onion, and matzah meal. Mix thoroughly. Cover and chill for several hours, even overnight.

Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil.

Dip your hands in cold water and make about 12 matzah balls. Drop them into the boiling water; cover; and simmer for about 30-40 minutes. Remove with slotted spoon.

Easter Chicks Cupcakes

- 1 box (1 pound 2.25 ounces) yellow or devil's food cake mix with pudding
- Water, vegetable oil and eggs called for on cake mix box
- 2 1/2 cups shredded coconut
- Yellow food coloring
- Vanilla frosting
- 48 brown miniature candy-coated chocolate baking bits
- 24 small orange gumdrops

Heat oven to 350° F (325° F for dark or nonstick pans). Place paper baking cup in each of 24 regular-size muffin cups. Make cake mix as directed on box, using water, oil and eggs. Divide batter among muffin cups. Bake 17 to 22 minutes or until toothpick inserted in centers comes out clean. Cool in pans 10 minutes; remove from pans to cooling racks. Cool completely, about 30 minutes.

Place coconut in resealable food-storage plastic bag. Add about 8 drops yellow liquid food color; seal bag and shake to mix. Frost cupcakes with white frosting. Top with yellow coconut. For eyes, add brown baking bits. Cut orange gumdrops to resemble beaks; place on cupcakes.

ON STAGE

Long Island Guitar Festival

Acclaimed artists in the guitar community gather at LIU Post's annual Long Island Guitar Festival, for a mix of concert performances, master classes and workshops. A concert with guitarist-lutenist Harris Becker and Friends opens the concert schedule, followed by classical guitarist Robert Trent and classical guitarist-composer, the U.K.'s Laura Snowden, in her U.S. debut, among others. Director of Guitar Studies and Adjunct Professor, Harris Becker, initiated the festival in 1993 to exemplify the music making process. "When most of the general public experiences a live concert, they only hear the final outcome to years of practice and dedication," Becker told LIU Post's "The Pioneer." "What I wanted to do was focus on the process to create more awareness to the art of music making." Monday through Sunday, April 9-14. Tilles Center, LIU Post, Route 25A, Brookville. THE GREAT BOOK GURU

Revenge . . . far from sweet

Dear Great Book Guru,
Spring is surely in the air with the beautiful month of April upon us. Do you have a good book to start off the month? I'd love a thriller with historical background.
—April Admirer

DIPIETRO

Throughout the book, we wonder what could have caused this supposedly good man to have done this. His children, sister, and wife are all collateral damage, as they struggle with the aftermath of Pete's crime. Time shifts and we are cast back to his childhood, courtship and then in the most graphic part of the story, we learn of his suffering and bravery in the Philippines during the war. Again, there is a time shift forward and we see to our horror the racism underlying all we have seen. This is perhaps Grisham's starkest commentary on the banality of evil. Highly recommended!

Would you like to ask the Great Book Guru for a book suggestion? Contact her at annmdipietro@gmail.com.

Dear April Admirer,

Every year, I look forward to the newest John Grisham, and this year's is a particularly fine addition to his collection: "The Reckoning." Pete Banning, a Mississippi landowner, is a returning World War II veteran when the novel opens. Shortly into the book, he murders the young pastor of his family's church. No explanation is given and Pete is stoic throughout his trial and the verdict.

NEWS BRIEF

Realty announces production leaders for 2018

Daniel Gale Sotheby's International Realty recently announced its top 10 production leaders for 2018. Chief Executive Officer Deirdre O'Connell made the announcement at Daniel Gale Sotheby's International Realty's Bravos Awards — four meetings that addressed the company's more than 1,000 real estate advisors, management and staff.

The top production leaders represent numerous offices across Long Island and all of them are members of Daniel Gale Sotheby's International Realty's Gold Circle of Excellence. In Suffolk County, the Cold Spring Harbor Office had four production leaders: Pamela Doyle, Jeanne Leonard, John Messina and Peggy Moriarty; Westhampton Beach had Rose Alfano; Cutchogue, Bridget Elkin; Greenport and Mattituck recognized Janet Markari-an and Donielle Cardinale respectively. In Nassau County, Rosalyn Meyer from the Manhasset office and Christina Porter from Locust Valley were the top producers.

In addition to recognition and celebration at the companywide meetings, the top 10 producers were honored at a special president's dinner hosted by Daniel Gale Sotheby's International Realty Chairman of the Board and President Patricia J. Petersen.

O'Connell noted that the achievements of the top producers were mirrored by the Daniel Gale Sotheby's International Realty as a whole and by the Sotheby's International Realty brand as well.

Project Overview: The City of Glen Cove is moving forward with its plan to provide a premier passenger commuter ferry service as an alternate commute option to Manhattan for its growing community.

Working with private companies to carry out the Master Plan, the development will have significant impact on the City, particularly the downtown and waterfront areas.

The anticipated residential growth of these transit-oriented projects directly support the City's primary goals of promoting economic development, increasing revenues and providing a variety of housing choices for the City and surrounding areas, while transforming a blighted and regionally significant waterfront into a vibrant mixed-use community.

REQUEST FOR EXPRESSIONS OF INTEREST

The City of Glen Cove is soliciting expressions of interest for the Ferry Terminal that will provide complementary uses and additional revenue for the City.

The objectives of the City are to:

#1: Maximize the use of Glen Cove's new ferry infrastructure and terminal building.

#2: Maximize opportunity for non-commuter vessel service, including dinner boats, tour boats, and leisure services.

#3: Maximize opportunities for recreational and weekend service, in addition to commuter ferry service.

#4: Foster economic development along the City's waterfront.

All bid documents, including any forthcoming addendums, may be found digitally at Glen Cove Ferry website: www.glencoveferry.org 109228

Project Overview: The City of Glen Cove is moving forward with its plan to provide a premier passenger commuter ferry service as an alternate commute option to Manhattan for its growing community.

Working with private companies to carry out the Master Plan, the development will have significant impact on the City, particularly the downtown and waterfront areas.

The anticipated residential growth of these transit-oriented projects, as outlined below, directly support the City's primary goals of promoting economic development, increasing revenues and providing a variety of housing choices for the City and surrounding areas, while transforming a blighted and regionally significant waterfront into a vibrant mixed-use community.

As such, the City of Glen Cove is soliciting proposals for a Ferry Operator that will provide a regular commuter service between Glen Cove and New York City. The service must be reliable, competitively priced, and plans for maintaining the service over the long term must be presented. To that end, the City will implement a ferry service that will provide point to point commuting to Manhattan and connect to the existing ferry networks in the regional market. The goal is to provide a combination of express and local ferry operations that provide a broad base of ticket fares, ridership demographics, and destinations.

Now that Mueller's done, Congress should get to work

Two years and $25 million later, the Mueller probe of Russian influence in the 2016 election concluded that there was no collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia. In typical Washington fashion, Mueller's report was met with partisan wrangling, with some Democrats clamoring for yet more investigations into whether

D'AMATO

President Trump somehow obstructed the Russia probe, even though it dragged on unimpeded for more than half of his term.

But some cooler heads in the Democratic Party seem to realize that harping on this fading issue isn't a political winner, and they may even be willing to work with Republicans to get some work done on the challenges and opportunities America has. Recognizing that in the current environment of endless politicking and a 2020 presidential campaign that's prematurely under way, and that the chance of getting anything done in Washington over the next two years is questionable, here's a to-do list Congress should at least consider.

How about starting with something both parties claim to agree on, which is the need to rebuild America's crumbling infrastructure? During the 2017 tax debate, much attention was focused on the idea of directing at least a portion of the revenue from repatriated overseas corporate accounts to help fund a major national infrastructure program. If the growing consensus of economists who predict the U.S. economy will slow down in the next two years is right, that's another reason to revisit this idea.

The hang-up with moving ahead on infrastructure rebuilding naturally centers on how to fund it. Republicans have generally favored a public-private approach that would combine some federal funding with private investment. Democrats generally favor direct federal funding of these projects without private-sector financial involvement.

Meeting somewhere in the middle on this divide is possible. Some projects might better fit the public-private approach, and others might be better choices for direct federal funding. But every year Congress postpones decisions on how to start rebuilding only adds to the cost of these projects and impedes U.S. economic progress.

Take, for example, the proposal to build a rail tunnel between New York and New Jersey. It would be an enormously expensive project, but experts agree it's badly needed, because the current 100-year-old tunnel system is beyond decrepit. The same goes for desperately needed improvements to New York's subway system and the Long Island Rail Road. The economy of our entire region would benefit from these long-overdue transit system improvements.

How about starting with something both parties claim to agree on, infrastructure?

Another area where the collision of partisan differences should be muted is in health care. Despite all the noise about this issue, the vast majority of working Americans have decent health coverage through their employers and the private health insurance system. Older Americans have Medicare, and the poor have Medicaid. Obamacare covered more of the previously uninsured, leaving about 10 percent of Americans without health insurance.

Upending the current system, as some Democrats want to do with a radical "Medicare for all" makeover, isn't the answer. Likewise, the GOP endlessly relitigating Obamacare serves no useful purpose. Congress and the president should work to find a way to help this vulnerable group of uninsured Americans get basic health coverage. And taking some reasonable steps to restrain runaway health care costs and high drug prices should also be on the table. None of this is brain surgery, but it does require putting heads together to get it done.

A related issue that demands bipartisan attention is the opioid crisis, which now claims more lives each year than are lost in auto accidents or gun crimes. This is a national emergency that should be attacked at all levels, with both stepped-up enforcement against drug dealers and better treatment options for addicts. Every dollar spent on interdiction and prevention will save both lives and dollars. Trump should personally take the lead on this pressing issue, and Congress should work with him to address it.

And if Congress and the president want to help the next generation of Americans, they should focus on fixing the bloated, overpriced, underperforming U.S. higher education system. College costs today are absolutely obscene, and they are weighing down young graduates with crushing debt burdens that make it difficult to impossible for them to buy a home or even a new car. Maybe it's time for a special counsel to look into how college got so ridiculously expensive.

Take it from the nonagenarians: chill out

I never, ever, saw my parents run. The only time I saw my mother sweat was when she was beating 12 egg whites for her Passover sponge cake. It was one of the riskiest things she ever did, and she did it every year — just once, for the holiday.

My father stressed out one time when he was 33, trying to put together a 400-piece swing set in the backyard. But by and large, day in and day out, week to week, year by year, decade to decade, they basically took it easy. That was their motto until the day they died, he at 97 and she at 94.

RANDI KREISS

I've heard that other families had mottos like "United and Growing" or "Every Day is a Second Chance" or "Family First." Ours was "Take it Easy." Our family coat of arms (had there been one) would have shown an elderly man in an easy chair with a book in his hand. That was pretty much how my dad spent most of his life. Of course, he worked for a few years, but by age 55 he was retired. He enjoyed his brief morning walk, then half a sandwich, a cup of decaf and a slow glide into his reading chair.

On a busy day, he might go to the post office, or if he was in super-high-energy mode, to the mall with my mother.

Mom's days were also mellow. She operated on a higher frequency than Dad, but whatever she did, she honored her personal code: moderation in everything. Taken with "Take it Easy," things moved slowly in their household.

And both lived well into their 90s. They never hiked, never biked, never saw the inside of a gym. They did some traveling with (of course) middle-of-the-road companies that guided them on non-adventurous trips that followed well-traveled itineraries.

Whenever I spoke with them, calling from my home in New York to their place in Florida, I always asked, "What did you do today?" which was remarkably silly of me, since the answer was always the same: They relaxed.

The thing is, they had a great life, a very long life and they were quite happy. Were they on to something or just a unicorn of a couple? The AMA, AARP, AAA and all the other alphabet organizations don't approve of sedentary lifestyles.

Mom and Dad never saw the inside of a gym, but both lived well into their 90s.

So what do I do? Follow the parental mode and veg out, or listen to the common wisdom and get up and go? I feel pretty guilty most of the time because I read about exercise but don't actually do it. I'm sort of a virtual jock. I read that sitting in a chair for more than 20 minutes at a time is clogging my arteries. I see on my computer that if I don't get off screens and jog into town, I'll cause my own heart attack or Alzheimer's or depression. I read all this stuff because I'm on screens way too many hours a day, and trending upward. I'm pretty much an expert on how much exercise I should be getting.

The most seductive health-related articles try to be encouraging with an it's-never-too-late pitch. I was kind of hoping that it is too late, that I could bag the exercise and go on power-saving mode, but the researchers are telling me that even in older middle age, which now apparently reaches to 100, one can still tone muscles and extend life. First they said it had to be three hours a week, then 40 minutes, then maybe just seven minutes of a really rigorous workout. I'm holding out for the two-minute jumping-jacks routine.

I thought perhaps I'd feel more energized if I targeted a problem. So I looked up how to trim upper-arm flab, which is one of the biblical plagues known colloquially as Hadassah arms, although the condition isn't particular to Jewish women. The trainers advise a regimen of bicep curls, push-ups and something called the Vasisthasana, or side plank pose. Mom and Dad would be appalled.

I will not tarnish their legacy by twisting my body into a side plank.

My hope is that when it comes to rigorous exercise, this too shall pass, and my parents' sensible way of life will come back in fashion. I don't have to say "May they rest in peace" because I know they are.

No matter the desperation, suicide isn't the answer

When anyone, especially a teenager, dies by suicide, it is difficult to comprehend. We see the person, seemingly vibrant, alive, and we wonder how he or she came to see life as so hopeless. We struggle to understand the sense of helplessness.

Yet teenagers and adults take their own lives. Suicide is the 10th-leading cause of death in the United States, according to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention. It is the second-leading cause among young people ages 12 to 24.

In 2017, 1.4 million people attempted suicide. The highest death rate is among middle-aged white men, 129 of whom die by suicide every day.

We were reminded of the terrible sorrow and suffering suicide brings when two teenagers, one 18 and the other 15, took their own lives recently at the Rockville Centre Long Island Rail Road station.

It was trying to report on these stories. We did not mention suicide in the headline. We ran the story well inside the paper, without noting that they had died by suicide. We reported the basic facts surrounding the teens' deaths. We did not want to sensationalize the story. Doing so can lead to "suicide contagion," a phenomenon in which someone on the edge reads about someone else who has died, and takes his or her own life in the same manner, according to reportingonsuicide.org.

Ninety percent of all suicides involve either an unreported mental health issue, substance abuse or both, according to the World Health Organization. But it is preventable, no matter the circumstances of a person's life. There are thousands of mental health experts standing by every day, waiting to connect those on the edge with

How to get help

■ Call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline, (800) 273-8255, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

■ Call the Bellmore-based Long Island Crisis Center Hotline, (516) 679-1111, also 24/7.

Other help lines:

■ The Runaway Hotline, (516) 679-1111.

■ The Long Island Rail Road Suicide Prevention Hotline, (877) 582-5586.

■ The Mental Health and Substance Abuse Helpline, (516) 227-8255.

the resources they need to restore hope in their lives. Suicide hotlines, which operate around the clock, offer immediate assistance.

Many people will say that they could not have predicted that someone they knew would commit suicide. They couldn't see the signs. But those signs are often clear. According to reportingonsuicide.org, a potentially suicidal person might:

- Talk about wanting to die.
- Look for a way to kill him or herself.
- Talk about feeling hopeless, with no purpose in life.
- Talk about feeling trapped or in unbearable pain, mental or physical.
- Talk about being a burden to others.
- Increase the use of alcohol or drugs.
- Act anxious, agitated or reckless.

- Sleep too little or too much.
- Withdraw from other people.
- Show rage or talk about seeking revenge against others.
- Display extreme mood swings.

If someone you know appears suicidal, you should:

- Never leave him or her alone.
- Remove any firearms, alcohol, drugs or sharp objects that might be used in a suicide attempt.
- Call a suicide prevention hotline.
- Take the person to an emergency room, or seek help from a medical or mental health professional.

There is no single factor that leads to suicide, according to experts. One job loss or romantic breakup is highly unlikely to end in suicide. The factors are myriad and complex. Each case is different.

Nationally, the suicide rate is 12 in 100,000 people. New York is significantly below that, at 8 in 100,000 people, according to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention. In fact, the Empire State has the lowest rate of suicide in the nation.

The states with the highest rates of suicide are all largely rural places where people can easily become isolated — a key risk factor. Montana has the highest suicide rate in the country, at 29 deaths per 100,000, followed by Alaska, at 27, and Wyoming, at 26.

If you're feeling suicidal or you know someone who is, please reach out for assistance. There are many people willing to help. Understand that your life has meaning. You matter to this world. Each of us matters.

Suoizzi to run as an independent

To the Editor:

I am running for City Council as an independent candidate on the Glen Cove Voters party line. I am an independent voice with a familiar name.

Born and raised in Glen Cove, I graduated from Glen Cove High School, and went on to attend the George Washington University in Washington, D.C. There, I earned my bachelor's and master's degrees in accountancy and spent three years auditing an executive department of the United States federal government. I'm a licensed CPA, and now work as an audit manager on Long Island and hold a Certified Government Financial Manager certification.

Wanted: a presidential apology that will never happen

I haven't seen an official announcement from the White House, but there's a rumor that President Trump will declare a National Day of Apology, on which all elected Democrats and the media will be required to apologize for insinuating that Trump colluded with Russia during the 2016 election. I don't know where the ceremony will take place, but I'm willing to participate — on the condition that the president apologize for his conduct over the past two-plus years.

Let's start with the Charlottesville, Va., tragedy in August 2017. Trump's reaction to this clash involving right-wing extremists and counterprotesters should have brought out the better angels in a caring public official. Instead the president pronounced that "there were good people on both sides," giving aid and comfort to the racists whose conduct resulted in the death of an innocent woman. It's time to for him to apologize for that.

I think the true believers who packed Trump campaign rallies are entitled to an apology. How many times did he pledge that Mexico would pay for a wall on the southern border? Mexico said no dozens of times, but Trump kept insisting that the wall wouldn't cost Americans one dime. In the end, even the Republican-controlled Senate refused to give him the money. If it gets built, taxpayers will pay for it.

Mr. President, isn't it time to apologize to America's sick and not-so-sick, who are worried about losing their health care? On the campaign trail, candidate Trump pledged that no one would take away coverage for pre-existing conditions or touch Medicare. That was then, and now he is once again spearheading an effort to kill the Affordable Care Act.

How about all those Americans who believed that a Trump in the White House would lower the cost of prescription drugs? Last June, in front of a group of pharmaceutical executives, he pledged to lower our drug prices within months. Time flies by, and the $2,000 pill for diabetes is still a $2,000 pill. Just another broken promise.

The notorious Republican senator Joseph McCarthy once said, "Judge me by the people I keep company with." To date, eight people involved in the Trump election campaign have either pleaded guilty or are awaiting trial for lying under oath. Isn't it time for the president to disavow his campaign team as a way of sending a message to America that there is no place for corruption in the house of Trump?

Remember that campaign pledge to "drain the swamp"? Mr. President, you filled it up with cabinet appointees who were forced to resign due to conflicts of interest, allegations of theft, costly taxpayer-paid airplane rides and furnishing offices elaborately at public expense. That's worth an apology.

Almost every living, breathing American knows that Russian President Vladimir Putin interfered in the 2016 election. And there's no question that he'll try to interfere in the 2020 election. Even if Special Counsel Robert Mueller didn't find Trump guilty of collusion, it's time to stop coddling a murderous dictator who wants to undermine our democracy. But in the case of Russia, there is only love from Trump.

Since 2017, America has suffered a bloodbath in our schools, our places of worship and our outdoor arenas, all caused by easy access to assault rifles. Not one of these tragedies has moved the president to pledge to end the carnage with background checks of potential gun buyers. It's a simple solution that wouldn't deny anyone his or her Second Amendment right.

How many times in the past two plus years has America waited desperately for the commander in chief to utter words of compassion at a time of national tragedy? During those dark hours, we hoped that our nation's leader would express his heartfelt sorrow in a meaningful way that would soothe the wounds of those in need of a little love. But those moments have come and gone, and Trump continues his brash, uncaring ways.

I would be more than happy to join the media and the opposition party to say that he is entitled to a collective apology for unkind statements and the prediction of his political demise. But before any American gives Donald Trump that satisfaction, it's time for him to apologize for failing America at a time when our country desperately needs a real, feeling, caring president

Glen Cove's own Mike Dukakis

To the Editor:

Councilwoman Marcia Silverman was elected to office in Glen Cove because she was one of the leaders of what could be called the "Never Waterfront Redevelopment" movement.

In fact, Silverman sued the city twice, trying to stop the billion-dollar redevelopment project. Then, once a councilwoman, after losing in the Nassau County Supreme Court, she went to the Appellate Division to get her name off the lawsuit that had gone up on appeal. She didn't want to be associated with it because of her obvious conflict of interest. After all, how could she sue the city at the same time she was on the Tenke team, which is now trying to take credit for the ongoing project that was finally put in place by former Mayor Reginald Spinello? One has to wonder if she told her supporters that she begged off the lawsuit they elected her over.

Silverman is now happily out in public displaying pictures of herself in a hard hat down at the waterfront construction site, making believe she has the project under control. For those who remember, she looks a bit like Michael Dukakis in his infamous tank ride.

You just can't make this stuff up.

Fresh Air Fund impacts young lives

To the Editor:

The Fresh Air Fund looks forward to celebrating National Volunteer Week, which is from April 7 to April 13. It is an opportunity to extend heartfelt gratitude to our inspiring volunteers, hosts and supporters in Nassau County.

The Fresh Air Fund's programs would not be possible without the commitment of our dedicated volunteers, many of whom are also host families, who serve on committees, interview prospective host families, publicize the program and plan summer activities. Additionally, individuals and local businesses give generously of their time and resources to make The Fresh Air Fund's Friendly Towns Program a great success throughout Nassau County each summer.

As we hear from alumni and connect with long-standing host families, we continue to learn how Fresh Air Fund summers have impacted lives — and continue to transform lives many years later. We have learned that a summer can last a lifetime.

The Fresh Air Fund, an independent, not-for-profit agency, has provided free summer experiences to more than 1.8 million New York City children from low-income communities since 1877. First-time Fresh Air children are boys and girls, from seven to 12 years
