City adopts bond totaling $8.9 million

BY JILL NOSSA inossa@liherald.com

Necessary infrastructure projects are expected to be completed in Glen Cove thanks to a bond ordinance passed by the City Council last week. The $8.9 million bond is part of a five-year capital plan developed by Mayor Tim Tenke and City Controller Mike Piccirillo to provide the city with strategic direction that, according to Tenke, will benefit the city two-fold: Infrastructure work will get done, and the city will actually save money.

"When we pay it back, the interest rate will be lower than what we're currently paying,'

Tenke said. "We're not actually impacting our budget for next year because our debt service is actually coming down."

'This is the first time we've put together a comprehensive five-year capital plan," Piccirillo said. "The city generally borrows every year, but there's no real foresight into what the coming years would require. But having a five-year plan gives us that vision. It also gives transparency to the public on what we anticipate doing over the next five years.'

Tenke and Piccirillo said they had met with each city department head to create the plan, which

Many may have a couple pair of jeans that have sat untouched in a drawer for quite some time and the Sea Cliff Farmers Market has a solution.

In an effort to promote sustainable living and to honor Earth Day, which falls on April 22, the farmers market that is held at Village Square in Glen Cove collected April 17 and will continue to collect on April 24 denim that will ultimately be recycled into insulation as part of the Blue Jeans Go Green Recycling Program.

Since Cotton Incorporated's Blue Jeans Go Green program launched in 2006, over one million pieces of denim have been diverted from landfills and recycled into insulation.

"I decided I wanted to try to do something around Earth Day," Sea Cliff Farmers Market organizer and manager Amy Peters said, "and I thought that would be a nice promotion to get it going and the market would be a great venue to start the drive.'

The jeans drive on April 17 was a success after farmers market attendees filled up a whole donation box with their jeans, and then some bags on the side. But it's not too late for residents who have a pair of jeans they want to go to better use, as there will be another drive at the market on April 24, the last market

How can an old pair of jeans become insulation?

Step one: Long before denim is recycled, it's harvested in its natural state: cotton. From there, it's spun, woven and prepared for garment manufacturers to craft into denim apparel.

Step two: That apparel is then purchased at the store and becomes a part of someone's wardrobe.

Step three: Once it is worn out, it can actually be recycled. The Blue Jeans Go Green Program from Cotton Incorporated collects denim to divert it from landfills, where millions of pounds of textiles are thrown out every year.

Step four: Denim is returned to its natural cotton fiber state and is recycled into new and useful items, like UltraTouch Denim Insulation, which is manufactured by Bonded Logic, Inc. This insulation is environmentally safe, has no carcinogenic warnings, formaldehyde or chemical irritants, has "extraordinary" thermal performance, 30 percent better sound absorption than traditional fiberglass insulation and contains active mold/mildew inhibiter.

According to Didier Trebucq, the United Nations resident coordinator for Barbados and Eastern Caribbean Counties and territories, following a series of powerful eruptions from La Soufrière volcano on the Caribbean island of Saint Vincent, 12,600 evacuees have now been registered and require support with basic needs for food, water, clothing and shelter supplies.

"I have been down in that part of the world for 38 years and my children grew up coming and going from St. Vincent and the Grenadines," said Rosow. CONTINUED FROM FRONT PAGE that."

By some accounts, the 229 students in the GCHS class of 2021 have had an even tougher year than the class of 2020. "Last year, at least, the kids had a normal senior year until mid-March," said Joanne Yee, co-president of the Music Performing Arts Parent Association and the mother of a senior. "This year they lost everything."

Yee and MPAPA Co-president Nicole Callahan started an Adopt-A-Senior fundraiser to let the seniors know that they haven't been forgotten. They have so far raised enough money to buy embroidered fleece blankets, which were handed out after the class photo was taken. The goal is to raise enough to purchase three items for each member of the class.

The school operated on a hybrid model until March, when students were allowed to return in person five days a week. Since then, they have said they feel like the year is improving. Senior Nikolai Glouchlov acknowledged that it hasn't been what he expected. "We haven't been able to do the stuff we normally would be able to do," he said. "It's been challenging, but we're getting through it." Glouchlov added that posing for the class photo, and the return to in-person school, have helped make the experience better. "It feels good. It's nice seeing all of my classmates.'

Delmy Henriquez said that there was a lot of uncertainty at the beginning of the year, and learning online was difficult for her. "I definitely focus more in the classroom," she said. "It's just really good to be somewhat back to normal. But it's our senior year, and we didn't get to have anything normal. We missed out on a lot, but the school really tried to make the best out of it, and I really appreciate that."

Carolina Brasiello said that the hybrid model was difficult for her, especially for her mental health. "I almost gave up on school because it was so unmotivating," she said. "We didn't have that typical senior experience. But now, going back almost every day helps a lot. The best part is that now we're all together, and slowly being back to normal. I like how we haven't given up yet on everything.

One thing that helped make this year better for Brasiello was the relatively last-minute Homecoming celebration earlier this month. "I never thought that we'd have a Homecoming," she said. "It's been a dream of mine to become Homecoming Queen, and I just won, so that was an amazing experience as well."

"I feel like, going into this, we were all clueless, and it didn't really hit us what was happening until we actually got into our senior year and realized that all of the events were off, and the spirit was crushed for us," Alise Mazjane said. "So it's nice to get something out of it."

One of the biggest challenges Brasiello said she faced was completing college applications without the handson support of a teacher. "Doing that whole process online and asking our teachers questions via email was pretty difficult," she said. "But I think we all got through it, and I think we all learned about technology."

Mazjane agreed. "I think the hardest part was the college process," she said, "because it feels like it happened very fast and we didn't have guidance for it.'

"This year has definitely been a learning experience," she added, noting that she believes the time spent alone helped her and her classmates grow and become more independent. "We had that time alone, so we could focus on what we want to do and figure out our feelings and our futures, so I think that was beneficial. But it was hard, because we were all isolated."

'The students are fantastic — they've been really good sports about this," Santana said. "These kids are missing out on what are typically formative years in all of our lives. We're trying to make the best of a bad situation."

The school was scheduled to host a drive-in Senior Movie Night on Thursday, after the Herald went to press, and Santana said that plans for a senior prom and graduation were in the works. Those interested in donating to the class of 2021 can email jyeeclass21@yahoo.com for more information.

County Legislature seeks marijuana ban in parks posed legislation that would make it illegal to smoke marijuana in county parks.

The legislation proposed by the Nassau Legislature's Republican majority would prohibit smoking cannabis at all county-owned facilities. It would cover all county-owned properties, including buildings, sidewalks, parking lots, parks, preserves, playgrounds, campgrounds and beaches. Violations would be punishable by a fine of $200 per incident. Currently, only the smoking of tobacco is prohibited at county-owned properties.

The recently passed state

Marijuana Regulation and Taxation Act legalized the recreational use and sale of cannabis products for individuals 21 and over. Municipalities can also opt out of allowing businesses to sell recreational marijuana, according to the law.

County Legislator Howard Kopel, a Republican from Lawrence, discussed why the legislation has been proposed. "We have the county-owned property such as this beautiful park where children often come to play and have fun," Kopel said. "When children come to play here, we don't want them to see other people using marijuana. It's wrong, and we want them to know it's wrong.'

William Gaylor III, a Republican from Lynbrook, said the county would send a "clear message" with this legislation that recreational marijuana use is banned at county parks.

"For the last 40 years, we've been fighting against the use of drugs in our county," Gaylor said. "To pass a state law that allows for the recreational use of marijuana seems absurd to me. I understand the decriminalization for small amounts, but a blanket law like this bothers me to the core."

Gaylor added that the res-HOWARD KOPEL olution is set to go before the full Legislature for a vote on April 26, and if passed, it will take effect immediately upon the signature of County Executive Laura Curran. "I don't know of any county agency or village who is in favor of this state law," he said. "Banning the use of marijuana on county-owned property is the least we can do as county legislators."

Susan Blauner is the director of the Saving Lives Five Towns Drug and Alcohol Coalition. Blauner said the coalition is doing all it can to convince municipalities to opt out of allowing businesses to sell marijuana.

COUNTY LEGISLATOR HOWARD Kopel spoke at Grant Park in Hewlett on April 14 about the proposed legislation that would make it illegal to smoke marijuana in all county parks. Former Glen Cove resident arrested for July murder

A former resident of Glen Cove has been arrested in connection with the death of a woman found in Maryland last July. The male suspect, 45, of Hempstead, was arrested on April 13 and is facing first-degree murder charges, according to police.

Police said that on July 29, 2020, the body of a 37-year-old female with stab wounds was discovered in a wooded area in Fredrick, Maryland, by local police. The subsequent investigation led investigators to believe the suspect had moved to the Glen Cove or Hempstead area. The Glen Cove Police, Hempstead Police, New York State Police, FBI Violent Crimes Task Force, and FBI Gang Task force all began assisting in the investigation, according to police. On April 13, police said, the suspect was located and arrested on Clinton Avenue in Hempstead. During the investigation, the Glen Cove detectives were able to determine that the suspect is currently employed at flooring company in Glen Cove and previously lived in the city. The GCPD also helped locate his current residence in Hempstead.

"I'm happy that we could assist the Frederick Police Department in locating and arresting this suspect," Det. Lt. John Nagle of the Glen Cove Police Department said. "Detective Brian Glennon and Officer Christopher Paolillo were instrumental in helping to locate and arrest this suspect."

Atria celebrates Glen Cove community

BY JILL NOSSA inossa@liherald.com

Last Friday, the Atria at Glen Cove held a give-back event for the community as a way to try to form a stronger partnership between the assisted living facility and other organizations.

Diane Ziems, executive director

"What I wanted to do was get to know the Glen Cove community," Executive Director Diane Ziems said. "We wanted to invite them here and show them that we've made a lot of changes at Atria."

Since joining the Atria about eight months ago, Ziems said she has made improvements with the quality of service, customer service, aging in place philosophy. "we try to do whatever we can to assist the residents so they can remain here. I want a partnership with different members of the community to benefit the residents and the community.

The Community Day event attracted members of the Glen Cove Chamber of Commerce, who stopped by to pick up lunch to-go, which included wraps made by Chef Moris Valle and salads and cookies from the Atria chef, and helped foster the connections Ziems was hoping to make.

Some of those who dropped by included representatives from Glen Cove Day Care. "I can possibly do an intergenerational program with their afterschool program and my residents. The Boy Scouts or Girl Scouts can come "whatever we can do to partner with the residents and the community, and give back to Glen Cove, that's my goal," she said.

She said the partnerships would give the Atria residents a "feeling of purpose" as well. "If I could partner with the schools, or the day care, that gives my residents a mission. They are all well-educated professionals," she said, noting that the residents include designers, musicians, chefs, artists and a poet. "There's so many people here with talents and knowledge to offer, and if we could find avenues for them now that we're open, that's what I want to do."

Throughout the pandemic, she said, "Atria did very well because they took a stance on the regulations and were very strict with their policies. But they also provided the proper PPE to all of the staff and the residents - they were never without masks, gowns, gloves or shields," she said.

The facility sent care packages to family members of the staff every week, which included toiletries, masks and gloves. "When they went home, they were safe and didn't have to worry," she said, noting they also provided car service to staff so they did not have to use public transportation. "All of that helped keep the Covid numbers very low here."

When the vaccination became available, staff and residents were mandated to get it. Atria held three clinics and all staff got vaccinated, so now, Ziems, said, Atria is able to have tours, communal dining, and activities.

"The residents are much happier," she said. "There seems to be life coming back to the community."

Country music star Eric Church will be the first performer at the new UBS Arena at Belmont Park, with a concert on Dec. 4 as part of his "The Gather Again Tour."

The reigning Country Music Awards Entertainer of the Year and current American Country Music Entertainer of the Year nominee has become a leader in the music industry's return to touring, and plans to adopt an in-the-round setup at his concerts, with the stage in the center of the arena floor in order to accommodate as many fans as possible.

He has also become an outspoken advocate for the Covid-19 vaccine, and plans to appear in an upcoming public service announcement promoting vaccine education, produced by ACM Lifting Lives, the Ad Council and Covid Collaborative. The ad was to air during the ACM Music Awards show on April 18, when Church was to debut a song off his "Heart & Soul" triple album project.

The trio of albums will be released in the coming weeks, with "Heart" available everywhere on April 16, "Soul" available everywhere April 23, and the middle album, "&" available exclusively to the Church Choir co-chairs of the newly formed SALT Caucus, a bipartisan coalition of representatives seeking to restore the federal income tax deduction for state and local taxes.

The 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, passed under then President Trump limited the deduction to $10,000, whereas it was previously unlimited, costing many taxpayers in hightax states like New York and California thousands of dollars each.

officers, to teachers, to nurses, and small business owners, I hear from people every d a y about what a crushing blow the SALT cap has delivered them.' 'Our effort to restore the SALT deduction is gaining momentum," Suozzi said. Together, Democrats and Republicans alike, we will advocate for the restoration of the SALT deduction and highlight the middle-class families who have been unfairly hurt by the cap."

In addition to Suozzi and Garbarino, the SALT caucus leadership comprises Co-chair Josh Gottheimer, a Democrat from New Jersey, and Co-chair Young Kim, a Republican from California.

North Shore completes 9-3 season

BY TONY BELLISSIMO

tbellissimo@liherald.com

Back coaching North Shore's field hockey program after a one-year hiatus, Kelley Huggins said early morning practices on the turf was one of the reasons for the Vikings' success.

"The girls had limited offseason work but they really embraced the early practices and were focused all season long," Huggins said after North Shore completed a 9-win campaign with a hard-fought 1-0 double-overtime loss at Port Washington on April 9. "It was a different experience playing in March and April instead of September and October, but it was just nice to get back on the field," she added.

As to not compete with the soccer teams or football for afternoon practice time on the turf, Huggins shifted gears to a 6:15 a.m. start. "We had short, intense practices until 7:45," she said. "It worked out well. Some of the girls went right to school afterwards and the remote learners went home and got ready for classes."

The Vikings (9-3) carried 28 in the program this spring and have a large core of underclassmen. "We focused on our passing game and doing the simple things well," Huggins noted. "I couldn't have asked for more from them. It was a great season."

The team enjoyed a six-game winning streak from March 18-April 3, including a pair of 3-0 wins over a Clarke team that's always competitive, Huggins said. Junior midfielder Emma Nelson scored in both games and sophomore goaltender Kate Conklin totaled 22 saves.

Conklin played defense last season but was pressed into goalie duties due to unforeseen circumstances. "She played awesome," Huggins said. "She has quick reflexes, strong clears and a strong voice.'

of the best stickwork on the team, was part of a deep midfield group. She had 4 goals and 2 assists. "She sees the field well and knows where to go with the ball," Huggins said. Senior middle Casey Colbert (team-high 8 goals, 4 assists) was a constant offensive threat and displayed a nifty touch around the net, while sophomore Grace Ledden (3 goals, 2 assists) brought a burst of energy to the midfield and forward spots

Freshman Hannah Gilliam enjoyed a big season as a defensive midfielder and brought a tremendous work ethic and skill set, Huggins said. "She plays with a lot of poise," the coach said.

Sophomore forward Daniela Martini made quite an impact as well, scoring 4 goals and pacing the team in assists with 7. "She's great working the sideline and on give-and-gos," Huggins said of Martini, who scored twice and assisted on two others to lead a season-opening win over Great Neck South.

The defense in front of Conklin was anchored by senior McKenzie Johanson, an experienced player who had a breakout season according to Huggins. "She stepped up her game and was one of our leaders," she said.

GLEN COVE HERALD – April 22, 2021

HERALD SCHOOLS Mayor Tenke connects with Glen Cove students

Recently, first- and second-grade classes at Deasy and Gribbin elementary schools in the Glen Cove City School District received a special presentation from Glen Cove Mayor Tim Tenke regarding good citizenship.

Tenke spoke to students about community members and their importance, safety, and good citizenship. Students learned about the importance of our firefighters and police department, and how they are vital assets to the community. Tenke also discussed his role as mayor and the responsibilities that he and the council members hold in governing the City of Glen Cove, including establishing policy related to pandemic safety, support and recreational programs.

The Glen Cove City School District encourages students to become well versed in history, geography, economics, civics, citizenship, and government. The District's Social Studies curriculum provides a safe and supportive learning environment that encourages cultural awareness and civic engagement.

MAYOR TIM TENKE speaks to Glen Cove elementary students, remote and in-person, about his role as Mayor and his responsibilities to the City of Glen Cove.

Americans experienced an array of emotions — sadness, outrage and horror — as they watched footage of former Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin kneel on George Floyd's neck for nine minutes and 29 seconds last year, well past the moment he had died.

After a year of widespread protests and promises of police reform, Chauvin, was found guilty on Tuesday of seconddegree unintentional murder, thirddegree murder and second-degree manslaughter. He will be sentenced in two month.

"I think it is not a celebration as much as we want to enjoy the moment," said Ravin Chetram, activist and vice president of the Oyster Bay-East Norwich Chamber of Commerce. "It's a time for awareness. A time for hope. A time for change, real change."

Hope Taglich, who is from Oyster Bay but currently lives in Maryland, said that she too was "thrilled" about the verdict.

"But I think it's alarming that we're celebrating over a rare instance of justice, or accountability being delivered," she said. "We're so unused to the idea that a police officer could be held accountable for killing a civilian, that when one is, it is a cause of celebration." Both Chetram and Taglich hosted and participated in Black Lives Matter rallies and protests in the hamlet throughout the spring and summer last year. And while they said they were able to see accountability in the murder of George Floyd almost a year later, there are still families who have not seen that for their loved ones.

"Breonna [Taylor], Elijah [McClain], Rayshard [Brooks]," Chetram said. "We do not want this to be a token given out to see all future cases thrown out."

Rev. Roger Williams, of First Baptist Church of Glen Cove, said he was nervous about the verdict, seeing that police officers have not been convicted for killing Black and Brown civilians, like 12-year-old Tamir Rice, who was killed in Cleveland by a police officer for holding a toy gun in 2014.

"I was thinking about how these unarmed men were greatly injured and even lost their lives at the hands of police officers and those officers were able to walk away, to be acquitted," said Williams, who is leading the local African American Commission on Social Justice. "I did not know if this jury was going to be bold and do as the prosecution had encouraged them to do, and that was to use common sense. What they saw, they saw."

When Williams learned that the jury had deliberated for 10 hours before making a decision, he began to feel a sense of hope that they had found Chauvin guilty. Williams and his 17-year-old son watched on television, as Judge Peter Cahill of the Hennepin County District Court read the verdict.

"I was relieved," Williams said. "My son saw that as a young Black man, that the systems of justice, the authority that the police department has, can and have the capability to side with what is right."

If the courts and police abuse people without consequence, Williams added, young people will not have any respect for them moving forward.

He stressed that he and other activists in Glen Cove are not anti-police.

"Derek Chauvin was not a police officer," Williams said. "He was not a police officer in the sense that he did not walk according to the mission and the sacred oath that police officers who you and I know do very well every day."

Courtesy Glen Cove City School District

Williams has worked with Glen Cove Police Department Chief William Whitton a number of times to help build unity between local police and the community it serves.

"I said it from the very onset that his actions were brutal and completely not justified," Whitton said. "He got what he deserved. Thankfully for the community, they have closure and they saw justice be served."

Glen Cove activist Antwan Brown, who took part in a Black lives matter march across Glen Cove and Sea Cliff and later joined a town hall over the summer with Williams, Whitton, Mayor Tim Tenke and other local leaders, said that after the verdict, multiple people reached out to him to say that he had made a difference.

"I was just a small part of a huge push for justice for my people," Brown said, adding that he received push back from some members of the community for his advocacy.

But despite this, he said he would continue to fight for change.

includes the purchase of new grounds equipment for the golf course, new emergency equipment for the EMS department and replacement vehicles for the Police Department.

"These are completely capital-driven projects," Piccirillo explained. "These are all things that necessitate infrastructure improvements, not related to termination payments or tax certiorari payments."

He also noted that some of the projects are grant-funded. "We borrow the money now," he said, "and then receive reimbursement from the county, state or whoever provides the grant to offset the debt service payments."

Last year the city upgraded all of the streetlights to LED lights through the Energy Services Master Cost Recovery Agreement with the New York Power Authority, a $1.1 million project that Tenke said would now actually save the city money. "That project will self-fund itself because of the savings that we will realize in electricity and maintenance over a 13-year period," he said. "Through Mike's calculations, if we pay this off now and finance it under a lower interest rate, we'll save approximately $160,000, and it's not costing us any additional money."

The interest rate for the LED project is currently 4.28 percent, Tenke said, which is double the municipal-bond interest rate the city anticipates for current borrowing. With the $1.6 million in grants associated with the capital borrowing, and the maintenance and electric savings of $1.4 million over the term of the lighting-conversion project, he said, a total of $3 million will offset the $8.9 million borrowed.

In the past, Tenke said, the city has been hit hard by multiple retirements, and has also sold off assets in order to cover unexpected expenses. Having a broader plan, he said, will help it budget for those types of expenses. "We're really working to improve the financial stability and outlook for the city," he said.

"This is only part and parcel of the long-term planning that the city is currently doing," Piccirillo added. "We started putting together a 2021 adopted budget that we feel is structurally sound and realistic, to be where the city needs to be at this point in time. And then once you have the realistic budget to build from, you build a five-year capital plan, and then you build a five-year operating plan, which will be the next part of the whole longterm fiscal improvement for the city. That's the only way we can really work to see what the city needs as far as managing the city finances."

On Monday, six days after the City Council unanimously passed the resolution, Piccirillo said that the city was preparing the documents. "Right now we're at the point where we're putting together all of the documentation to give to the bond adviser, who will put together an official statement to give to the marketplace for them to decide on who will actually buy the bonds," he said. He also noted that the timing seems right from a financial

"February of this year had historically low municipal rates, and by the time we borrow, we anticipate it to be relatively the same," Piccirillo said. "That was one of the reasons that it was important to do as much as possible this year, not just because the city needed it, but our debt service payments going forward will be less than they are in the current budget."

Before voting on the bond resolution, Councilwoman Marsha Silverman thanked Tenke and Piccirillo "for finally getting the city on a longer-term plan and tying it into a longer-term operating budget, which will really set the city on a path for more fiscal discipline."

Piccirillo told the Herald that city departments' priorities were discussed when the plan was put in place. "This provides a better strategic vision for the city, so we know what to expect down the line rather than every year starting from scratch, trying to figure out what the needs are at the time," he said. "This way there's a placeholder in every year, which will change as new developments come into play. It's important to start looking at the city in a longer-term sphere."

Throughout the pandemic, healthcare workers, first responders, grocery and pharmacy personnel, and so many others, have been dedicated to supporting and assisting our community. They are true heroes who deserve our respect, praise and recognition.

ith more than 70 parks and recreation facilities, Nassau County is literally full of places to play. Many of these parks have pools — both indoor and outdoor —great playgrounds (and winter skating — but no need to think about that now). Others offer some of Long Island's most unique opportunities for recreation. From a recreation of a 19th-century village to an aerodrome field to castle-like mansions, Nassau County has plenty to offer.

Hiking and biking trails, swimming pools, and outdoor adventures can be had all across the county. Here's a selection to get you started on your family adventure. And don't forget a about a pleasant stroll or bike ride at your local neighborhood park.

Cedar Creek Park/Seaford

With an archery range, dog park, tether car speedway, an aerodrome field for model airplanes, as well an award-winning playground and a year-round roller rink, the 259-acre Cedar Creek is worth a visit. The archery range is free and open to the public. Archers must bring their own equipment.

An Academy of Aeronautics card is required for a permit to use the aerodrome field, but spectators are welcome at no charge. Spectators are also permitted at the tether car racetrack, one of only a few in the United States, and which attracts visitors from all over the world. The park is run by Nassau County.

Christopher Morley Park/Roslyn

With 98 acres, this county-run park, located in northern Nassau, boasts a recently renovated playground with a nontraditional climbing apparatus, a basin for model boats, shuffleboard, horseshoes, outdoor ice rink, outdoor pool, and tennis courts. Additionally, there are 30 acres of peacefully wooded nature trails and a dog run.

The park hosts a farmers' market from mid May-late November. Golfers can enjoy a 9-hole, par-30 course. Families can get fit along the one-mile fitness trail. There are 20 stops along the trail with equipment and instructions for doing pull-ups and balance activities.

Eisenhower Park/East Meadow

Larger than Central Park in New York City, Eisenhower Park offers visitors a multitude of athletic and recreational activities. Fitness facilities include a world-class aquatic center and gym, 16 tennis courts, ice skating center with two NHL-sized rinks, athletic fields, and basketball courts.

There is also an outdoor fitness trail with stations incorporating different exercises. For families eager to spend some time together, there is an 18-hole miniature golf course and three renovated playgrounds, one of which has a sprinkler pool. The Let All the Children Play play area is one of only a handful of playgrounds on Long Island designed with disabled children in mind.

The park, Nassau County's largest, which hosted many seasonal events throughout the year prior to the Covid-19 pandemic, including outdoor movie nights, concerts, and celebrations, will eventually return to its event schedule.

Garvies Point Museum and Preserve/Glen Cove

Tour the dioramas illustrating Long Island's geological history as well as Native American archaeology. An interactive exhibit encourages children to climb aboard an authentic dugout canoe, gather some fish, then pick corn and other vegetables and place them on a realistic looking fire for a "meal."

After touring the museum, visitors can amble out back, enjoy a picnic, identify butterflies in the colorful garden, then head down to the beach. A short but steep woodland path takes you to the rocky shore of Long Island Sound. The museum hosted workshops and events all year long, prior to the pandemic, and is expected to resume when it is safe to do so.

Nickerson Beach Park/Lido Beach

With 155 acres of recreation, including a half-mile of beachfront on the Atlantic; a fun zone for kids that includes a playground and basketball courts; a pitchand-putt golf course; and a food concession open in the summer, Nickerson Beach Park is more than just a beautiful beach. For families looking to do some camping, there are 74 recreational vehicle sites and 13 sites for tents. Group area camping is also available; reservations are required.

Planting Fields Arboretum/ Oyster Bay

This state park is the former estate of the Coe family and an original Gold Coast estate. It includes the original 409 acres of property, with the historic buildings, English gardens and greenhouses. Take a stroll through the lush grounds and woodlands and admire the largest collection of camellias in the Northeast. Enjoy a picnic on the lawn or grab lunch at the café. Tours of the Tudor-style Coe House are available, and public events are held frequently.

Old Bethpage Village Restoration/Old Bethpage

Step back in time and visit a recreation of a 19th-century village. The 209-acre living history museum features a variety of homes, shops and businesses. Among the many al celebrations, including the popular Long Island Fair each fall. On Another Nassau County park, Wantagh Park is right on the water. This park often gets overshadowed by Jones Beach State Park, which lies just south. But Wantagh Park is quieter and easier to access. The main attraction is the swimming complex that includes an Olympic-sized pool, diving pool, kiddie pool, training pool, and an interactive sprinkler pool with two water slides.

There are a variety of fitness facilities, fields, and courts in addition to a fitness trail. Or simply walk along the water and enjoy the views. There is also a dog run with separate areas for large and small dogs.

Back to camp Making a safe choice during Covid-19

ummer camps can be a chance for children and teens to make friends, learn new skills, and spend time outdoors. Kids have missed out on a lot of these opportunities during the pandemic.

You may be looking for a camp where your child can relax and reconnect, but worried since Covid-19 continues to be a concern. More than a year into the pandemic, studies show that camps with proper safety steps in place can greatly limit the spread of Covid-19 infections. Key steps include mask wearing, physical distancing, having smaller groups, and cleaning and disinfecting as part of the daily routine.

If you're considering camp for your child this summer, whether it's a just during the day or an overnight program, start by addressing these questions.

How will the camp help children follow coronavirus safety rules?

Camps should have age-appropriate ways to help children practice hand hygiene, stay a safe distance from others, and wear face masks whenever possible and practical. This can be a challenge, especially for younger campers, so they will need a lot of reminders.

Will most activities be indoors or outside?

Having activities outdoors, with more fresh air and room to spread out, can lower the risk of spreading Covid-19. Being outside also gives children a way to connect with nature, which can boost their health and mental health after a long, stressful year. However, even outside, it is important to avoid sharing germs. Camps should limit shared equipment for games and activities and clean them often.

Are there extra safety steps taken for sports camps?

In addition to the general safety steps for overnight and day camps, sports camps should follow safety guidance for drills, practices and competitions. This includes local and state rules, If you're sending your child out of state, which can vary widely.

What happens if someone gets sick?

Camps should have plan for what to do if a camper or staff member starts having symptoms of Covid-19, or any other illness. This should be based on local/state public health guidelines and policies about how to respond and report suspected Covid-19 cases. They should provide clear information to staff, campers and their families on when and how long to stay home if they get sick or have close contact with some who has Covid-19.

Is camp staff trained on the specific health needs of children?

Children attending camp may be afraid of being away from home and gathering faceto-face with others after a lengthy time at home. The camp's health providers should have specialized training in children's health and emotional well-being. Counselors should also have training available to help children cope with stress they may be experiencing.

What kind of support is available for campers with special health care needs?

Camp directors should aim to meet the needs of all children. Some children with special health care needs or disabilities may need special accommodations so they can enjoy camp while being protected against Covid-19.

If your child has special health care needs, talk with camp directors and your pediatrician to identify what specific accommodations your child may need. Existing plans, such as Individualized Family Service Plans and Individual Education Plans, can be helpful.

How will campers move throughout the day at camp?

According to the CDC, small groups of campers with dedicated staff, when possible, will help minimize Covid-19 risk. Staggered arrival and drop-off times may also help limit contact between groups.

How will snacks and meals work?

It may be safest for campers bring their own meals, if possible, and eat in separate areas or with their smaller group. This would be less risky than dining halls or cafeterias. Ideally, children should bring their own water bottles rather than drinking from water fountains.

What extra steps are being taken at overnight camps?

When looking at overnight camps, ask if children will bunk with their daytime groups and how sleeping areas will be arranged. Lining up mats or beds so that campers and staff sleep head-to-toe at least six feet apart can help limit risk,

Should my child be tested for Covid-19 before or during camp?

A diagnostic Covid-19 test can be useful when a camper or a staff member had a known exposure, or is showing coronavirus symptoms. In these cases, test results can help quide decisions such as who can return to camp safely, when to notify families whose children may have been exposed, or whether the camp should be closed

However, antibody blood tests should not be used in decisions about going to camp. These tests only show if someone had the virus at one point in time. They can't identify someone who still has an active infection without symptoms, for example.

Summer isn't cancelled

Cheering our kids to summer safely

or many of us, the memories of summer camp stick with us forever. They're triggered and brought to mind by the smell of a campfire, the sight of a canoe in the water or simply a cheeky song that we remember belting out with our summer friends. 2020 put a hold on the making of those memories, but as things come back to the table of opportunity, many summer programs are working diligently to create a safe space for our kids to begin to get back to the business of making memories.

Whether you're ready to register, or prefer to create your own summer memories with your children, find an option that makes you comfortable.

As the end of a pandemic school year approaches, the idea of summer break may cause some stress for parents, not quite sure of what to expect or how to prepare for a happy, safe summer.

While your child may be thrilled by the end of the school year, anticipating lazy days and sleeping in, the prospect of summer break isn't quite that unalloyed pleasure for parents. And if you have a child with emotional or developmental issues who is challenging in the best of times, nothing calls on whatever extra powers you might possess more than the long break that lies ahead.

Make it visual

Kids who thrive on predictability and are prone to panic over transitions -including those on the autism spectrum - benefit from posted schedules that outline what will happen throughout the day.

Make plans

Try to schedule as many activities as possible that work for your family, as early as possible, and keep your kids posted. This can mean anything from "we're going to Aunt Mary's on Thursday for a barbecue" to having a set routine that every day, weather permitting, you'll be going to the playground or pool. Even one such activity can give kids a center of gravity, so to speak, around which the rest of the day can be structured.

Get outdoors

Home has become a safe cocoon during the pandemic, but no child should spend hours in front of a screen. If camp or a local summer program isn't in the cards, try to find something your child enjoys — riding a bike or scooter, or splashing at the pool, water park, or beach — and do it.

Plus, physical activity is good for everyone's mind, body and spirit, especially those kids with energy to burn.

ear Great Book Guru, Every year I look forward to the Long Island Reads event our local libraries host and I especially enjoy

WILLIAM P. DILGARD, JR.

William P. Dilgard, Jr.

William ("Bill") P. Dilgard, Jr., of Glen Cove, NY age 76, passed away peacefully at home surrounded by family on Saturday, April 10, 2021 following a difficult battle with cancer. He is survived by the love of his life, his wife of over 50 years, Rosemary. He was a devoted father to William ("Billy") III (Carla), Carolyne (Seymour), and Victoria (Joseph), a doting grandfather of six (Philip, Charlotte, Isabella, Lucretia, Henry and Emily), and a loving uncle to his nieces and nephews. Happiest when surrounded by family, he treasured having a full house, booming with laughter.

Bill, formerly of Queens, was a longtime resident of Glen Cove. Always available to help a neighbor or friend, he was active in the community. He served on various boards and was a member of the Matinecock Rod and Gun Club. An avid cyclist, he could often be seen riding his bike around town with his bright pink helmet. He enjoyed gardening in his yard, which was more accurately described as "playing in the dirt." Taking his grandkids for a spin on his ride on lawn mower was the highlight of any weekend for him.

A proud graduate of St. John's University in Queens, where he also received his MBA, he remained active in the alumni community. In 2006 he was honored with the St. John's Outstanding Achievement Award for Alumni. He was a partner with Deloitte Consulting. where he was recognized as an expert in his field as well as a great mentor and colleague. OPINIONS The tyranny of false equivalencies

y March 4-10 column, "Voting is an act of choice and an expression of voice," prompted a note from someone who wanted to talk about threats to democracy. He leads a group of citizens who support candidates, without regard to party affiliation, as long as they support the principles of democratic government. He also said the group avoids candidates on the extreme right and left. When I asked for examples of positions taken by the extreme left, he referred to U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and three other female members of the House of Representatives.

These four popularly elected officials, however, do not advocate revolution or communism and are not anti-capitalism. Indeed, they advocate policies that the majority of Americans support. These include President Biden's pandemic rescue plan, an infrastructure bill to repair roads and bridges and expand broadband, background checks for gun purchases, renewable energy with tax credits and increased taxes on large corporations that currently pay low or no taxes. They advocate policies to address income inequality, climate change and international cooperation. They do not deny the protections of the Constitution. If these are far-left policies, then the majority of Americans are far left.

My reader then mentioned Sen. Bernie Sanders. While Sanders calls himself a socialist, he does not advocate a government takeover of private business. He calls for protections of workers and fair treatment for those on Main Street, not just for those on Wall Street. Even Jamie Dimon of JPMorgan Chase has cited the need to eliminate tax subsidies for hedge funds, private jets and golf courses. That's is what socialism looks like: government subsidies for private enterprise.

In contrast, the far right attempted to undo a legitimate presidential election. It also is determined to remove government regulations that ensure food and water safety. Alarmingly, members of the far right also advocate severe limitations to voting by claiming, without evidence, that there was widespread voter fraud in the 2020 and 2016 presidential elections.

In sum, it appears that those my correspondent called far left support programs that most Americans view as necessary, and those he calls far right want to reduce and limit the rights of Americans.

Some cite the protests associated with Black Lives Matter gatherings as evidence of far-left activity, but those protests were largely peaceful and advocated fair treatment by police. They have not threatened lives the way white supremacist groups have in Washington, D.C., Oregon, Virginia > and elsewhere, or planned to abduct an elected official, as they did in Michigan.

In fact, while a 2020 review of almost 900 politically motivated acts committed since 1994 found that some were committed by farleft groups, such as the Animal Liberation Front and the Earth Liberation Front, the attacks resulted in one death. During the same 25-year span, acts committed by farright groups ended in 329 fatalities.

It is true that some on the left have called for "defunding" the police in response to cases of police brutality and the use by police departments of militarystyle weapons, vehicles and tactics. But this has been largely a matter of rhetoric to force an agenda. Calls for defunding the police are a plea for shifting some funds from policing to mental health counseling, conflict-reduction training and community policing.

At times, it seems the media and others promote false equivalencies in order to acknowledge both sides of an issue. But that leads to a distortion of truth, in this case by claiming that there are equivalent extremists on both sides of the political aisle.

We can see this in claims of "cancel culture." Yes, speeches by some conservative commentators have been canceled because of student protests, and there are threats to free expression on some college campuses where groups try to mandate anti-racism programs. I disagree with many of these actions. Alternative points of view should be debated, presumptions of guilt should give way to evidence, and intolerance of questions has no place at a university.

But these incidents pale in comparison to the far-right efforts to pass legislation controlling what can be taught and who can teach at universities, in defiance of a Supreme Court ruling.

Our democracy requires truth, transparency and less anger. We need our elected officials to reflect the will of an informed citizenry and to work together for the common good. We need to protect the principles of social justice and equitable treatment. If one side is always saying no to policies that a majority of Americans support, you have to wonder why. There is no path to justice when anger prevails, when some rely on alternative facts, and when no one listens to contrary opinions.

don't care if you are numb to this outrage. I don't care if I'm numb to it. From where I sit, the carnage from gun violence in America, the continuing, ongoing, shocking deaths by gun, move to the head of the must-do list for this new administration.

We know that list is long, and every one of the top five issues feels like a hemorrhaging wound that needs to be stanched. Covid vaccine rollout? Migrants at the border? Stimulus for the economy? Crumbling bridges? Insurgents storming the halls of government? Every problem demands action, but the national epidemic of gun violence speaks to a malignant cultural sickness that we need to treat now.

2020, the year of the pandemic, was the deadliest year for gun fatalities in decades, according to The Washington Post. That fact is especially interesting because the number of mass shootings (four or more people killed) decreased. Apparently, people were home more, so they just shot one another.

We are making up for the dip. Since January, we have suffered 147 mass shootings in America. Some 12,416 people were killed by guns over these four months. These are people shooting family and friends and strangers. These are suicides and armed robberies and kids picking up guns and shooting their brothers and sisters. These are drive-by hits and "accidental" killings.

No one wants to take away anyone's legally owned guns. But we need better laws to keep guns out of the hands of children and criminals and unstable individuals. We need bans on military-style automatic weapons. Last week. President Biden said he would take executive action to fight what he called "an epidemic and an international embarrassment of gun violence." It is a modest initiative.

Golda Meir famously said that when Israel's enemies loved their children more than they hated Israel, peace would be possible. The same could be said of Congress: When they love our children more than they hate standing up to the National Rifle Association, the slaughter will stop.

As I write, police are investigating a mass shooting at a FedEx outlet in Indiana. Within an hour of the murders, the usual post-massacre teams gathered at the scene: police, media by the truckload and a group that travels from killing spree to killing spree with counselors and money for funerals and warnings about post-murder scams.

The fact that we have such a team in America is both an indictment of our society and, obviously, a necessity. Hook Elementary We all know the lingo of "lockdown" and "active shooter" and PTSD caused by shootings. Really, it is an abomination that we have become so proficient at handling the tragedies rather than preventing them.

> Remember Sandy Hook? Dylan's mom and Daniel's dad write to me often. In truth, I dread reading their e-mails; their words darken the day. But how wrenching it must be to write the words. These parents are leaders of the Sandy Hook Promise Foundation, the group that advocates stricter gun-control laws. They are victims of the tragedy, both having lost first-graders in the mass shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School in 2012. Their work is pure and hero ic — trying to find a slender thread of hope in the heap of terrible grief that has consumed their lives

When 20 little kids were murdered in their classrooms and no serious gun control was enacted, it was more than disheartening. The legal gridlock effectively proved the intractable power of the National Rifle Association Schools installed locks and alarms, but this isn't about inventing better security systems in our schools. If alligators were on the loose in schools, we wouldn't give our kids alligator repellent. We would get rid of the alligators.

In an average year in this country, guns kill some 30,000 people. The information comes from the Gun Violence Archive, a nonprofit formed in 2013 to offer free online public access information about gun-related violence in the U.S.

We need legislators to write and pass laws that will end the slaughter.

Do members of Congress love their children? You bet they do. Do they love their jobs so much that they won't stand up to the NRA? You bet they do. When they love their children, and America's children, more than they love NRA money, we may finally see support for real gun-control laws.

L.I. making strides on the environmental front pril 22 is Earth Day, when we come together as a nation and a planet — to celebrate the natural world and renew our vows to protect the environment from harm.

In honor of Earth Day five years ago, the Herald developed a three-part wish list of actions that government representatives and private citizens might take to help clean up and preserve Long Island's environment. This year, we decided to take a look back and see how we're faring in meeting the goals on this seemingly lofty list.

Point One: Cleanup of the Northrop Grumman toxic plume.

In 2016, we wrote, "Gov. Andrew Cuomo and the State Department of Environmental Conservation must find a way to force Northrop Grumman and the Navy to clean up the toxic mess they left behind in Bethpage, Wantagh and Seaford. The toxic plume that formed during World War II beneath the old Grumman aerospace plant in Bethpage is steadily moving southward. Chemicals used to manufacture naval warplanes were carelessly allowed to seep into the ground. If the plume isn't stopped, it will eventually reach South Oyster Bay, contaminating the fragile wetland ecosystem that hugs the entire South Shore and harming, if not destroying, the area's fishing and clamming industries. The stakes could not be higher."

We are happy to report that Cuomo announced a $406 million remediation plan in December among the state, Northrop Grumman and the Navy to clean up the plume. The only trouble: Doing so could take 100 years, showing us, in no uncertain terms, that it's far

How it all began

In 1970, America led the way in founding the now international Earth Day movement. Sen. Gaylord Nelson, a Wisconsin Democrat, came up with the idea after witnessing the environmental devastation caused by an infamous 100,000-barrel oil spill in Santa Barbara, Calif., in 1969, according to the nonprofit Earth Day Network. On the first Earth Day – April 22, 1970 – some 20 million Americans took to the streets and parks to protest widespread industrial damage to the environment.

better to prevent damage to the environment through government regulation than to allow polluters to have their way.

Point Two: An ocean outfall pipe for the Bay Park Water Reclamation Facility, one of two Nassau County sewage treatment plants.

In 2016, we wrote, "Our federal, state and local governments must — must find a way to fund an ocean outflow pipe from the Bay Park Sewage Treatment Plant, a county facility, three miles out to the Atlantic Ocean. The greatest environmental threat facing the South Shore is nitrogen-laden effluent from the treatment plant. Each day, millions of gallons of this wastewater pour out from a cement pipe in the middle of Reynolds Channel, just north of Long Beach. From there it is dispersed by the tides.

"The nitrogen accelerates seaweed growth. The seaweed, which grows to unnatural lengths, easily breaks apart and rots, robbing marine life of dissolved oxygen. There are now whole sections of the Western Bays that are considered 'dead zones.'"

Today, we are happy to report that the county is moving ahead rapidly with plans to construct a $408 million pipe from the Bay Park plant under Sunrise Highway, in an abandoned aqueduct, and then on to the Cedar Creek Water Pollution Control Plant. From there, it will be sent three miles into the Atlantic Ocean.

Point Three: Nitrogen reduction.

In 2016, we wrote, "Local municipalities, businesses and even homeowners must take responsibility for the unnecessarily high amounts of fertilizers they pour on lawns to keep them emerald green. Golf courses consume vast amounts of fertilizer. So do homes. Any excess fertilizer that doesn't dissolve into the ground is washed into street drains, and from there into the bays. Fertilizers also accelerate seaweed growth," damaging the bays.

In 2021, we are happy to report that the Long Island Nitrogen Action Plan, a partnership among the DEC, the Long Island Regional Planning Council, and Nassau and Suffolk counties, has made significant progress in assessing the extent of Long Island's nitrogen pollution and developing plans to reduce it.

So much more needs to be done, however. Homeowners can help by spreading only organic fertilizers on their lawns. The organics dissolve slower in the soil and do not wash away as easily as synthetic fertilizers.

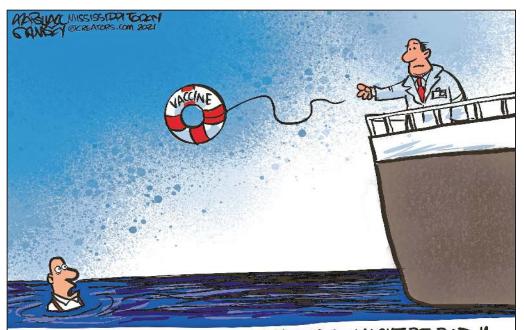

Clearly, Long Island has made significant strides these past five years, which is cause for celebration. Protecting our environment, however, is a never-ending battle that we must win.

LETTERS The city's looking to the future

To the Editor:

At the last City Council meeting, the mayor and council announced their capital borrowing plan. While this in itself was not unusual, the plan had some historic implications. The mayor, the council and the controller worked together to create a comprehensive long-term plan that plots the course to Glen Cove's financial stability. In many previous annual state comptroller reports on Glen Cove, long-term planning was always a missing component. This five-year plan is another first in the city's history, and it is definitely a step toward sound financial discipline.

The plan addresses the city's financial priorities. For example, it identifies what requires attention and replacement in our infrastructure. We now have a plan to re-evaluate infrastructure that

In fact, this news demonstrates that the process is working. Safety has always

The worst example of this neglect is our water system. Water contamination and lack of supply are no longer concerns for residents because of this administration's fiscal planning. This plan allows us to build on our system in order to grow our infrastructure as our population increases. The plan addresses our parks, the public service equipment and emergency equipment across all our departments. Every department has been assessed.

This bold undertaking did not happen overnight. This administration has been working on it since early January. The mayor, the City Council and the controller worked together to gather information from every department. Assessments were made and a plan was developed based on needs, while also taking into consideration any increased repair costs, age of equipment and immediate needs.

Many questions were asked at the meeting, and all were answered. Let's be clear: In 18 months, Mayor Tenke and this council were able to make the muchneeded changes and stabilize our city — and did it while keeping the city open and running. As we look to more long-term planning, we actively pursue the goal of limiting unexpected future costs across the board. We want to make Glen Cove the best it can be in the long run.

been paramount to this massive vaccination effort, perhaps the largest clinical undertaking in centuries. This pause and let me reiterate that it is only a pause for now — indicates that the U.S. is well organized to evaluate, and ideally prevent, these occurrences.

The Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System is used by agencies to report the side effects of vaccines, an effective and seamless way for federal agencies to alert physicians to symptoms of these seldom-seen blood clots and treat them properly if they encounter them. In terms of J&J's vaccine, more than 6.8 million people had already received the single-shot dose before the pause, so there was about one-in-amillion chance of this severe clotting to occur. And still, the six cases were enough to persuade clinical advisers to decide to review progress before moving forward.

The CDC's Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices is meeting to investigate these cases closely to determine their cause, and whether vaccinations should continue. Their job is to openly discuss the safety and process moving forward. And in the age of misinformation, their work is critical to presenting the facts.

Vaccines are the biggest weapon in the fight against Covid-19, and in a timely way, because timing does matter. It matters in places like Michigan, which is now seeing a fourth surge in coronavirus cases and hospitalizations. It matters for countries like Thailand, which until now have been able to contain the virus. And it certainly matters for the loved ones of the women who suffered the blood clots.

I can almost hear the faint calls of those who have been hesitant or resistant to being vaccinated. They will likely mislabel these rare side effects as common, distorting them into reasons to skip the inoculations. That would be a grave mistake and miscalculation.

With Covid-19 stubbornly hanging on as the third-leading cause of death in the U.S., we cannot afford to simply eliminate this type of vaccine from our anti-pandemic arsenal without the most careful consideration, nor can we afford for nine million recently shipped doses to go unused.

Let's not mince words about the need for this vaccine. The World Health Organization reported that more than four million people were recently diagnosed with Covid-19 in a single week. In that context, our federal agencies bear a heavy burden as they evaluate whether these unusual medical occurrences are vaccine-related.

Let's push forward with the use of the other vaccines while we place some trust in the agencies charged with investigating the safety of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine. For all of us, I hope for a better understanding of why the women suffered the severe clotting, and the establishment of parameters so we can safely resume the use of the vaccine in the near future.
